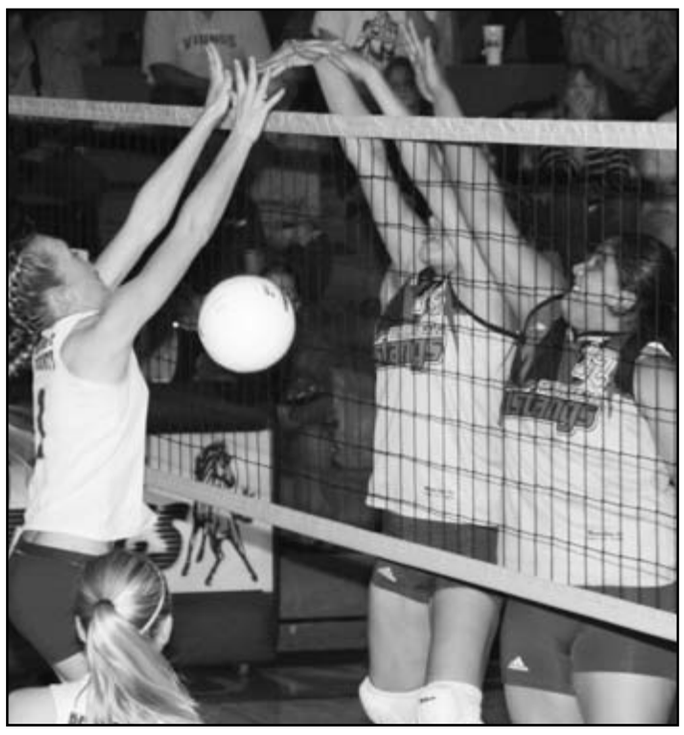
Bennett County prevails, wins District 14A shutting out Pine Ridge



Red Cloud takes five to get by Custer, moves on to 15A championship match with Hot Springs

By Tom Crash
Sports Correspondent

KYLE - The Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes came into the 2007 14A volleyball tourney in Kyle on Tuesday as the number one seed with a 19-9 regular season record and a Douglas Invitational 25-21, 10-25 and 25-22 win over Bennett County while the Lady Warriors from Martin carried some tradition with them, state tournament appearances in 84, 85, 87, 88, 91, 94, 95, 96, 02, 03, 04 and 06 with a pair of state championships in 85 and 94; Bennett County shut out Pine Ridge 25-21, 26-24 and 25-18 to win the 14A title and the opportunity for another state tourney appearance with a slot in the 7A regionals on Tuesday.

Bennett County lost the services of Maggie O'Neill to graduation, she starts for Black Hills State University as a freshman and Cara Kratovil, an up and coming junior who chose not to play this year; the Lady Warriors used a solid team defense to hold Pine Ridge down as Amy O'Neill, Maggie's younger sister, Kelsie Harris and Shae Risse provided the firepower to knock off the Lady Thorpes. Bennett County defeated Little Wound in the first round 25-11, 25-8 and 25-19.

O'Neill was all over the court as she hit some key spikes, got some crucial digs and provided solid setting when needed. Laura Porch dominated the back row and Shawna Evans came off the bench to provide some quality support. Bennett County's four sophomores and four juniors provided the main thrust of the Lady Warrior attack.

Saadia Tasso, Pine Ridge's six foot junior, provided most of the offense for the Lady Thorpes who defeated St. Francis in the first round 25-16, 25-18 and 25-12. Aimee Pond and Liane Her Many Horses helped with senior leadership.

Bennett County went up in the first game 18-11 only to have Pine Ridge close the gap to 18-17 before Bennett County closed them out 25-21. In the second game the teams were tied up late in the game at 18, 19, 21 and 23 when Pine Ridge went up 24-23 with the serve and game point on the line; after serving it into the net, Bennett County went on to close the second game out 26-24.

Pine Ridge finished the season 20-10 and will lose Pond and Her Many Horses to graduation.

Bennett County moved their record to 19-13 and will play the District 13A winner at Todd County on Tuesday, Nov. 6 for a trip to state. Todd County lost to Gregory on Tuesday night 25-19, 25-12 and 25-16; Gregory will play the winner of the Platte-Geddes and Winner match on Thursday for the District 13A championship.

In District 15A, Red Cloud got by Custer in five games 23-25, 25-7, 25-18, 18-25 and 15-11 while Hot Springs beat Hill City 25-14, 26-24 and 25-19, Red Cloud travels to Hot Springs for the 15A championship on Thursday at 7 p.m.

Additional district volleyball scores included 11A Miller over Crow Creek 25-7, 25-7 and 25-17; 5A Madison over Flandreau Indian 25-4, 25-8, 25-7; 11A Langford/Roslyn over Tiospa Zina 25-11, 25-16 and 25-17; 13B Kadoka over Crazy Horse 25-2, 25-5 and 25-8; McIntosh downs Tiospaye Topa 26-24, 25-14 and 25-18 and 16B Takini over Dupree 26-24, 25-11 and 28-26.

Big Crow, Mayville State open season with two wins

MAYVILLE, N.Dak. - Laura Big Crow, Pine Ridge graduate, led the way as Mayville State University defeated Brandon University 76-52 this past weekend to open their 2007/08 season, Big Crow knocked down 28 points and grabbed 13 rebounds.

"When we signed up Laura last year, it was a big step for us, she is a huge piece of the puzzle, she is so strong for us and will be even stronger this year," said Dennis Hutter, Mayville State coach, "we will rely on her as a senior and for her leadership, for scoring and rebounding and our goal is to surround her with a good supporting cast. We have seven of our top ten players back, we have added a Division I transfer and a point guard from Minnesota so our goal is nationals and we need to keep Laura on the floor to get there, she is such a mismatch for anyone who has to guard her and when they double or triple team her, we will be ready and this year we are going to be more creative in getting the ball into Laura, there is a lot of excitement around our team this year."

The Comets made it two in a row to open the season with a 75-57 win over the University of Winnipeg on Saturday night scoring 47 in the second half. Big Crow finished with 18 points. Mayville State hosts Anoka Ramsey Community College on Saturday, Nov. 3.

On Nov. 24 they travel to Marshall, Min. to take on Northern State University and on Dec. 11 they are in Grand Forks for a game with University of North Dakota.

"When Laura decided to come to Mayville, I literally started dancing on my desk," said Hutter, "she works her tail off, she stays out of trouble, she's a great role model and really if you haven't seen her play and you look at her, she doesn't always seem like a ball player but she surprises you, she just keeps coming back and she just keeps fighting, she's a gamer."

Thoughts that come from the heart

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

To my sister Charlene

Last week Dana Bad Milk had a wonderful column about family and how we make each other laugh.

As Lakota people, humor is a gift of healing and it is part of our culture. For sure though, when we have family support, we have a gift.

I come from a big family. Between my mom and dad, there were 12 of us and from those siblings more nephews, nieces and many, many grandchildren and some great grandchildren. My mom was good at keeping track of family, she kept a notebook with birthdays and special events. Another family trait my mom tried to teach us was to take care of each other and support each other through thick and thin. She said it promoted strong family ties.

My sister Charlene Bush is like that, she promotes strong family virtues. She is also my mentor and my hero.

Ever since I can remember she was there for me. I watched her stand up for her beliefs and her family. After her divorce, she raised her six children as a single mother and encouraged them to do good in their lives and get their education. She wasn't highly educated but she had high expectations and she knew how to get what she wanted for her family.

She encouraged me do good in my life. Whenever I got off track, she managed to find a way to remind me how to keep focused. There were times she couldn't say it but she managed to find a way to let me know.

When I was feeling down, I knew I could call her and she would say the right things. When I thought I was doing the right thing for myself, and it wasn't, she has helped me see a wider, futurist view of my situation and suddenly it wasn't worth the effort.

She is always there, always a pillar in our community and always a pillar in our family.

She has been sick for some time now but always managed to come through and express that vibrancy and strength she is known for.

But now she is getting ready to go home. We don't know when but I know it's the hardest thing emotionally to know someone you love is going to leave to the spirit world. And it is harder to accept, when you love them so much. It's even harder to accept knowing I am the weak one and she still is the stronger one.

Even at a time like this, she is a pillar of strength. She is ready to go and said she is excited to know she is going to Heaven and there is no pain or sorrow there, she said.

Loss is one of the toughest human emotions to deal with. It takes a great amount of coping skills and faith to get through loss of the death of someone you love.

Too many times we forget to learn and teach these skills to our families.

They are important skills, but in reality no matter how much we may think we know, nothing can heal the emotional pain of loss, except time. It's about getting through that time in a healthy way.

There are so many things she believes in and has supported. She was on the local Oglala Lakota College board because she believed in education, she supported the beginnings of the Bennett County Pow Wow in July because she wanted the community to have their own pow wow and celebration and to teach non-Indians to improve race relations.

The list goes on and on.

She believes in celebrations to honor the accomplishments of family and community. Most of all she promoted family.

So my sister Charlene, you are going to leave a legacy in your children, your grandchildren, your great grandchildren and all those you have touched in our family and community and all the beliefs you stood strong for.

I wanted to write these words for you to let you know you will never be forgotten and you are loved by many.

A Lakota language lesson

The Lakota language is so rich with words that most of us will never use and that is regrettable. In a lot of the language curriculum that targets our children there is repetition that is seen as children progress through school and that needs to be modified.

For example, children should know their shapes, colors and animals by the time they are in grade 3 or 4. After that there should be a progression to more difficult words and some basic dialogue that is meant to equip children with familiarity of the more advanced sounds.

They do not have to revisit their shapes and colors and in the middle school and high school they can begin to study how different letters and words are joined together to make a new word.

I have heard pros and cons about the value of breaking down words and having students understand where the root words came from.

I believe that might be a worthwhile exercise as long as it does not consume all of class time.

I remember asking ko-la, Francis Whitebird for the translation of titonwan and he assigned me the task of translating it into English before he would tell the meaning of the word. I believe that we sometimes get bogged down in making sure we understand the English equivalent of a Lakota word is and that may be a mistake.

We don't need English to validate or legitimize Lakota as it is an indigenous language that is just as complex and unique as any other.

I think it would be more desirable if we learned a new Lakota word and then, in our minds we were able to understand its meaning by using Lakota to form the setting and circumstance in which it is used.

For example, I first heard the word epah a couple years ago as it was used along side woglake and I correctly assumed that it meant someone who is talking inappropriately about someone or one who is not sticking to the topic at hand.

It could also mean someone who is talking outright negatively. The "h" in "epah" by way is the same "h" that is used in a word like "pahle" or "inahma." The "h" when used this way is called a glottal stop. Another example is "wowahwala" which means "peaceful."

I like words like that as the sound is like coming to a screeching halt, especially if it comes at the end of a word like "epah." It makes you feel as if you really do know Lakota if you can use the "h" in such a way.

Another mistake we often make as we study Lakoa is that we tend to impose an English sentence structure upon English as we attempt to make sense of a phrase or sentence.

Francis points out that most other languages of the world share a structure like Lakota and it is English that is in the minority when it comes to the way the words are ordered.

We have to avoid falling into the trap of comparing Lakota sentence structure to English as Lakota is in reverse order.

It is a difficult challenge to attend to that as we study Lakota on a daily basis, but we have to try.

I appreciate the fact that "ko-la" Francis is able to spend some time pondering these kinds of issues as I am able to share in them. A lot of such issues need to be included in a reflective journal that speaks to the uniqueness of Lakota; otherwise, they are easily forgotten until they are confronted again.

We also have seen the more "classic" Lakota writings of Father Apple and his work deserves a lot of attention as it represents the more sophisticated side of Lakota that may be lost forever as we work to retain whatever language we use on a daily basis.

By the way, I didn't successfully translate the assignment given me by Francis, however, he said it meant, "One who is from a family who lives in a tipi."

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Notes From Indian Country

By Tim Giago

The church pedophiles must not go unpunished

Writing about lawsuits can be like going to the dentist; it can be numbing and very painful. With that I will try to be as brief (no pun intended) as possible.

Two lawsuits involving the physical, mental and sexual abuse of Indian children while living and studying at Indian mission boarding schools will be heard by the South Dakota Supreme Court to determine if the suits should be dismissed because they have exceeded the statute of limitations.

Attorney Greg Yates of Rapid City, SD is representing the plaintiffs. Yates also has a law office in California, and he is a graduate of the University of South Dakota School of Law. He believes that some of the local news coverage has been inadequate and slanted toward the defendants.

The St. Francis lawsuit (Lloyd One Star and Marian Sorace) was filed in Rapid City and seeks damages against the Catholic Diocese of Rapid City; the Wisconsin Province of the Society of Jesus; and the Denver-based Sisters of St. Francis.

The St. Paul's suit (Zephier and Cuny) was filed in Sioux Falls and seeks damages from the Catholic Diocese of Sioux Falls; Blue Cloud Abbey; Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, based in Pennsylvania; and the Oblate Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament of Marty.

I have read the suit filed by the plaintiffs and the charges are descriptive and they explicitly describe the acts of violence and sexual abuse performed upon the children. The children are now adults and many years have lapsed since the alleged acts of sexual abuse by the priests and nuns.

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The Indian mission boarding schools were often located far from the homes of the children and they were brought there as boarders. They lived at the schools nine months out of the year under the protection of the prefects, nuns, brothers and priests.

These were innocent children and many of them were barely able to speak English. It was their first experience at being away from home. They were entering an institution where they would be under the total control of the Catholic Church.

Having spent 10 years of my life at an Indian mission boarding school, I can readily attest to the physical, mental and sexual abuse of the children at the school I attended. I wrote about it in my book, "Children Left Behind."

These children were being indoctrinated into the rituals and beliefs of the Catholic Church. It was not out of the question for the abusers to warn the children that if they spoke about what happened to them that they would be committing a mortal sin and they would burn in hell. At most Catholic boarding schools the children were required to go to confession at least once per week. Can you imagine their fear when they looked through the confessional screen and saw the face of the priest that had been abusing them? What were they to think? Don't you know that they were already suffering from the guilt pushed upon them by their abusers? When they saw the face of that priest behind the confessional screen they knew that they had no one and nowhere they could turn to for help. They buried what happened to them deep inside.

Most Indian children are naturally very shy. And now they find themselves in a strange environment, far from home, and under the control of white people. Many of them had never been around white people. These people were not only strangers to them, but also strangers of a different race. Having heard the horror stories from their grandparents about the massacre at Wounded Knee, they were terrified of the white people. Having never witnessed or experienced corporal punishment at home because it was not the Indian way, it was a terrible shock for them to see a fellow student beaten with a leather strap. It reinforced the truth of the stories they had heard about whites before coming to the mission.

I have witnessed the frightening revelation of hidden thoughts and fears whenever I speak to a group of elderly Indians about the boarding school experience. Nearly every time I speak I can see the tears flowing down the faces of the elderly men and women. They remember. They recall the things they have kept hidden deep inside for many years.

Not long ago when I spoke at the Pueblo Cultural Indian Center in Albuquerque, an elderly Jicarilla Apache man, pulled himself up by his cane and said, "Mr. Giago, I have something to say about the mission boarding school I attended," and then he stopped, he tried to continue, but he could not. He broke down and cried.

Children abused by Catholic priests from Boston to Los Angeles have had their day in court and have been awarded restitution although no amount of money can ever heal the pain they have suffered. The Indian children should not be denied justice.

I believe that the South Dakota Supreme Court should not dismiss these cases because of the statute of limitations, but it should allow the jury to hear the cases and let them decide when it was that these terrible memories came back to these abused children of the Indian mission boarding schools. The pedophiles at the mission schools must not go unpunished.

Giago to speak at Columbia/Barnard Heritage Month opening reception

NEW YORK - The CC/SEAS Office of Multicultural Affairs & The College Activities Office-Barnard College will be hosting Native American Journalist and Human Rights Activist Tim Giago at this year's Native American Heritage Month's Opening Reception. This year's theme, "Contemporary Native America: Envisioning Today's Kaleidoscope of Cultures, Keeping Yesterday and Tomorrow in Sight" speaks to the multifaceted and enduring contributions of Native Peoples on the past and present.

Giago, Oglala Lakota, has received many professional awards including the University of Missouri School of Journalism's Honor Award for Distinguished Service in Journalism in 1991, The South Dakota Education Association/National Education Human and Civil Rights Award in 1988, the Golden Quill Award for Outstanding Editorial Writing by the International Society of Weekly Newspaper Editors in 1997, and Best Local Column by the South Dakota Newspaper Association for the years 1985 and 2003 and the Great Spirits Award from the Navajo Institute of Social Justice in September of 2004. The Harvard Foundation honored him in 1991 for his contributions to the growth of American Indian newspapers and Indian journalism. He will be inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame on Nov. 10 at Brookings.

He has appeared on national television on shows such as Nightline and the Oprah Winfrey Show. He has also been featured in many magazines such as Newsweek and People Magazines.

His weekly column, Notes from Indian Country, appears nationally and also appears in many South Dakota newspapers as well as in many Indian newspapers and on the websites of indianz.com, nativetimes.com, lakotacountrytimes.com and huffingtonpost.com.

His weekly column is distributed by McClatchey News Service (formerly Knight Ridder) in Washington, DC.

This year's Opening Reception will take place in Brooks Hall's Lewis Parlor at 6:30 p.m. on Nov. 1st on the campus of Barnard College in New York.

Falcons repeat as team state champions

MISSION - For the second year in a row, the Todd County cross-country runners are the best team in the state. The Falcon girls (4th) and Falcon boys (5th), teamed up to bring home the prestigious State Team Championship at the recent state cross-country meet.

"Winning this award for the second year in a row speaks very well of what we are trying to do with our cross-country program," said head coach Tonya Whirlwind Soldier. "Of course it takes tremendous athletes to win something like this, and we have some great runners on our team."

Lottie Grimshaw was the top Lady Falcon finisher as she garnered a third place finish in the girls class A race. Grimshaw's big finish, teamed with Julier Bernie, Kyla Marshall, Kylie Wilson, Josie Stone and Arna Two Hawk to bring home the girls fourth team finish.

"Julie Bernie has been an integral cog in the Falcon cross-country program as a six time state qualifier," said Whirlwind Soldier. "Our girls were a little disappointed with a fourth place finish, but once they found out they placed as a team, and won the combined team award they were all smiles."

1st - Kelsey Barrett - Britton/Hecla (15:38)
3rd - Lottie Grimshaw (TC) - 16:11
42nd - Julie Bernie (TC) - 17:34
47th - Kyla Marshall (TC) - 17:36
59th - Kylie Wilson (TC) - 17:45
108th - Josie Stone (TC) - 19:04
130th - Arna Two Hawk (TC) - 20:24

The Todd County boys finished in fifth place in the Class A boys race, getting strong individual races from Sophomore, Marc Whirlwind Soldier (3rd), and junior Wes Running (5th). Whirlwind Soldier has had a season long battle with race winner Eamin Entwistle (Hot Springs) and Hill City's, Andy Coy (second place). Falcon junior Wes Running took an early lead at Huron with Whirlwind Soldier, Coy and Entistle breaking from the pack midway through the race.

"Having two or our guys in the top five , speaks volumes about the commitment Todd County runners have to getting up front and running with the big boys," said coach Whirlwind Soldier. "We had some younger runners, Max Grimshaw and LaBradford Eagle Deer that will be counted on to move up next year and help us go after that team title next year."

1st - Eamin Entwistle (Hot Springs) - 16:12
3rd - Marc Whirlwind Soldier (TC) - 16:32
5th - Wes Running (TC) - 16:45
78th - Max Grimshaw (TC) - 18:56
91st - LaBradford Eagle Deer (TC) - 19:20
126th - Jason Black Lance (TC) - 21:47
130th - Domingo Tamayo (TC) - 24:38

"Winning the combined award is really fun for the kids," said Whirlwind Soldier. "It means those long hot practices in August and the over 200 miles of running during the fall season were all worth it."

This was the scene on U. S. Highway 83 south of Mission. A Nebraska pickup truck driven by an unidentified driver partially slammed into the back of RST council representative, Norman Running, as he was pulling off the highway. Neither driver was injured. Photo by Archie B. Beauvais

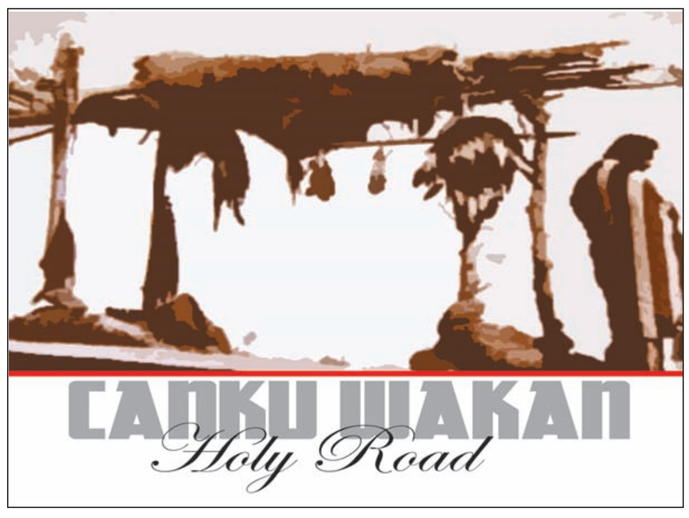
Fender Bender south of Mission no injuries reported

MISSION - District 4 Rosebud Sioux council representative, Norman Running and wife Shannon, escaped serious injury on Saturday, Oct. 27 after being rammed from behind as they were turning west off the highway and onto the cut across road to Lakeview road and to Rosebud. Running was re-elected for another two year term in the RST general election held last Thursday.

At approximately 1:20 p.m. Running was driving north on U. S. Highway 18 eleven miles south of Mission and as he was approaching the turnoff to the gravel road, his turn signal was operational. He said just a few minutes earlier, he noticed a vehicle which came up on him quickly and then proceeded to back off a bit. As he began to slow down to turn he noticed that the vehicle was bearing down on him and he would have been hit if he did not quickly exit the highway.

As it turned out, Running was rammed at the same time as he turned left and the white pickup truck which was driven by an unidentified young male slammed on his brakes.

As he did so, the pickup truck with Nebraska plates which was pulling a small trailer with an all terrain vehicle and a motorcycle, jackknifed and caused the pickup to tip over on the right side and as it did so it ended up facing south. Running's pickup did not appear to be damaged.



Immediately after the accident, Officer Robert Sedlmajer of Rosebud Law Enforcement Services, who was traveling south to Valentine, Neb. on his day off, was able to assist the young driver in climbing out of the passenger side door.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I was told about you through a friend who needs guidance like me so we sit on the phone for hours talking about you and reading your articles.

I do believe in you.

Well here it goes. I'm a junior in high school and an adult in love. I love my boyfriend dearly he's my one and only as I'm for him, but there's a big problem, we've been fighting a lot over things that matter to one or the other you know what I'm talking about.

Things like when I feel offended when he smiles and laughs at me, but he says he doesn't mean to, he says he just wants me to understand him and stop fighting. We have been happy for about a year and six months. Not only that but we are so young and deeply in love. We've been through the hardest times dealing with cheating and how strong we are to overcome the lies around us.

In the past I was manipulated by a friend that said he was cheating and now days the mistrust is still lingering in my soul.

I feel very insecure about the way I look I know everyone goes through skin problems, but I can't stand mine anymore! What do you see about that? I gave him my heart and soul not to mention he did back. I do test him to see if does love me as much as I do him. I'm afraid to ask you if he likes anyone else though I don't think so, but I wanted to just ask.

I would love to hear the truth, but I don't want to hear something that would break my heart. I hope he doesn't like anyone else I know that I don't! I'm afraid of the truth and I'm afraid of not being loved. So you probably do see what I go through right? The nights I cried over the phone for him and praying that this works. I know he goes through the same pain as I do too Anna. His parents keep him on lock down all the time and we don't like it! What do you think we should do about that too? As a couple I know we are stronger than most of the others around us.

We don't want to break up, don't you see how happy we used to be? Don't you see that we still are, but we just need guidance. Well Anna I wanted to ask you what is it that you see in the future? I know that I and my boyfriend will work I just want to hear it from you.

You're my last hope, because we need to know what the future holds....Do you see me with my love still, and it all worked out? I hope so because we are strong Anna you can see that.. We need each other. Well I hope you write back. We need your guidance, so please help.

Young Love

Dear Young Love:

Sometimes in the world, young people meet, fall in love, grow up together, get married and it works. That is a dream that I love too. I know two couples in my immediate circle of friends where this story is true.

Both couples have had many hardships to face but they have managed to work them out together.

Being afraid of not being loved enough is the main problem behind every issue within an adult relationship. Self doubt is the underlying problem.

Doubting that you are wise enough to know what is good for you, doubt that you are not wise enough to know when someone else is good for you, and doubt that you are worth loving.

Know that there is no reason for your boyfriend to be with you if he didn't love you. You are not supporting him financially, not rescuing him from some terrible fate, and not offering him anything that he couldn't get elsewhere. Therefore, know that he is with you for the same reason you are with him: you love each other.

He has no other girl-friend. He does like almost everyone he knows, but that is not competition, that is a sign of good mental, spiritual and emotional health.

You are beautiful. Try vitamin A and vitamin E to help your skin problems. Be sure and wash your face with a clean wash cloth at least twice a day. Never allow make-up to sit on your skin over eight hours. Don't eat fried foods, too much refined sugar, colas, and high-fat foods. Wal Mart carries several excellent products for external application, talk with the pharmacist or the pharmacist's assistant to find the best one for you.

Good luck in your trust issues. Let your boyfriend tease you - it is part of what makes him so funny. Read the book (both of you), The Four Agreements by Don Miguel Ruiz - talk about it together.

There isn't anything you can do about your boyfriend's parents restrictions except to learn to live with them. As you both get older they will go away.

Good Luck. It looks like with a little effort, things will work out in a good way for you.

Dear Anna,

How have you been? Good I hope. Well for me I'm not doing so well. I have a lot of unanswered questions that are going through my head and it bothers me.

I have court at the end of this month, I was wondering do you see any good coming out of that day? I'm just really curious because I don't want anything to happen to me or any body else, but I guess all I can do is pray. Thank you for your time to read this and hopefully you will write back. Well God bless and take care.

Curious Young Lady

Dear Curious Young Lady:

I see things working out in a good way. The court will listen to your plea, take into consideration other evidence presented and find in a way that ends this conflict. I do see a young man having to really explain himself and the court will not be pleased with how he presents his side of the story.

Nobody gets hurt. Nobody goes to jail at this time, and everything comes to light that needs to.

OST suspends treasurer, council members pending completion of drug tests

PINE RIDGE - Wednesday afternoon, KILI Radio received a terse two line memo from Crystal Eagle Elk, OST treasurer stating that due to the suspension of the tribal treasurer, there will be no payroll or program checks until further notice and if you have any questions contact William Shorty Brewer, OST vice president.

According to Garfield Little Dog, council representative from Wounded Knee district, the action goes back to resolution 07-173 passed by the council recently that required all tribal council representatives and executive board members to get a hair follicle drug test or face suspension.

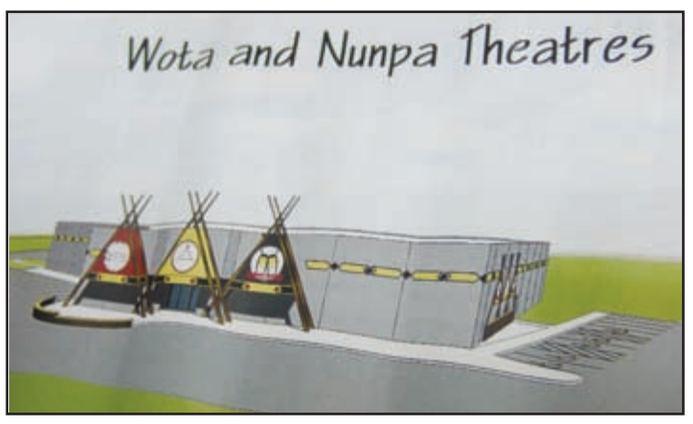
"As far as I know, Crystal Eagle Elk, myself, Kim Claussen and Austin Watkins have done a urine test but not the hair follicle test and have been suspended," said Little Dog, "Kathy Janis, Tom Poor Bear and Jim Meeks have also been suspended and it is my understanding that Crystal's hair follicle test was scheduled and a relative died and she wasn't able to complete it, I've tried to get it done twice and Kathy Janis has gotten it done but is waiting for the results.

There were no further comments or any additional information available by press time.

Newly elected RST council take oath of office

ROSEBUD - The RST tribal building was noticeably packed with Sicangu Lakota tribal members who had come to witness the installation and oath of office by the newly elected RST tribal council and vice-president. The oath was administered by RST tribal court judge, Sherman Marshall. RST tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux presided over the official event; however, his candidacy was challenged by former RST vice-president, Louis Wayne Boyd, and as a result he did not take office until in the afternoon.

Three former RST tribal chairmen were in attendance, including Webster Two Hawk, Charles Colombe and William "Willie" Kindle. Kindle, elected as the new RST vice-president was also sworn in. BIA superintendent, Cleve Her Many Horses, was also present for the ceremony.



The RST election board which accepted the challenge last week apparently reviewed the complaint and settled the Lack of infrastructure holds up new Kyle Wota and Nunpa Theatre construction

Above: The vacant area, south of Kyle, where site work will take place this week. Right: Wota and Nunpa Theatres will provide a wider selection of groceries and will make it possible for movie patrons to see the latest films near home. The architectural for the store was designed by ARC International.

KYLE - Site work will begin this week for a 22,000 square feet grocery store and theater Wota and Nunpa Theaters, just south of Kyle.

Wota meaning to eat and Nunpa meaning Two Theaters is the latest building development in Kyle and will be built just south of Kyle. RAMP, Inc. (Reddest Angel Mona Patton) has contracted Hahn Construction to begin the site work this week for their new store. Angel Reddest and Mona currently own Lil' Angels, a convenience and gas store in Kyle.

Mona 'Sis' Patton, said getting the infrastructure in place for the new building has been a struggle. Although, they are ready to select a contractor for the new building, they need to know that infrastructure of the roads, the sewer and the water will take place.

The new store and theater will connect to the BIA Allen Road but a turning lane is needed along with paving the gravel road that leads Lakota Funds building from the BIA road. By paving the gravel road will allow the community of Kyle to have a secondary road and ease traffic in front of the school. The Oglala Sioux Tribe's Transportation Department has been working to prioritize funds to get the road paved and provide turning lanes to the new store.

Another part of the infrastructure is a line from the sewer main, which involves three fourth of a mile of sewer line. The design is to construct a main that allows others to tap into the sewer line, which means there is need for a lift station. Patton said there are other homeowners and another business that would benefit from the extended sewer line, as well as future developers in the southeastern side of Kyle.

The last part of infrastructure that is needed is a water main. There are no water lines in place now to the new store development area. There is currently a water pump in place near Lakota Funds and funding is needed to expand water pipelines to the building site. Cangleska, Inc, has applied to USDA to get construction funding to expand the water infrastructure. Patton said she is unsure if Cangleska will get the 100 percent of the funding needed for construction.

Minnie Bordeaux, not your typical pow wow royalty

Red Cloud, Carthage College graduate, youth minister, screenwriter

Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PORCUPINE - "Basically, I was in a state of shock when they chose me," said Clementine "Minnie" Bordeaux following her selection as Miss He Sapa Win during the 21st annual He Sapa Wacipi in Rapid City the first weekend of October, "of course you want to win but it's a surprise especially when you can't always have your expectations too high."

Bordeaux is the daughter of Chris and Deb Bordeaux and is enrolled at Rosebud even though she grew up on Pine Ridge and went to school at Red Cloud. Chris is the director of the Oglala Sioux Tribe's new department of education while Deb is the principal at Loneman School in Oglala.

"Many of my educational endeavors are because of my parents," said Bordeaux.

Minnie graduated from Red Cloud High School in 2002 as the valedictorian of her class. In 2006, Minnie graduated from Carthage College in Kenosha, Wisc. with a bachelor of arts in theatre and a minor in religion. Following her graduation, Bordeaux attended a film institute at the Institute of American Indian Arts in Santa Fe where she learned the basics of making films; she wrote a script for a film, directed and edited it. It was call Rez Toll, it was eight minutes and I learned so much from it and met a lot of great people. An earlier script got selected for production and in November of 2006, she went to Las Angeles for a week to participate in the production and filming of her script.

"He can't be caught" will premier at the American Indian Film Festival in L.A. at the end of November.

Minnie Bordeaux, 21st Annual HeSapa Win.

"Down the road I want to go back to school and develop my writing skills," said Bordeaux, "I'm looking around now, maybe in California, I need to learn more about film schools, maybe fall of 2008 or 2009."

Currently, Bordeaux is the youth minister for the Catholic churches on the reservation operating out of Porcupine's Christ the King with plans to expand the ministry to other areas around Pine Ridge. She is working on setting up a variety of activities for youth, first in the Porcupine area and eventually beyond. They took four youth to a youth rally in Belle Fourche and have set up a movie night on Tuesdays.

"I'm really honored and humbled to represent the Black Hills pow wow and Lakota people for the next year," said Bordeaux who has already gone to the Native American Day celebra-

Meetings were held in the spring on who was responsible and where the funding will come from to expand Kyle's infrastructure. Those involved have been Rural Water, OST Water and Sewer, OST Transportation, Cangleska, Inc., Medicine Root District and the Indian Health Service. She said resolutions were drafted and approved through the district levels and the tribal council to promote infrastructure expansion but still yet it is unsure if and when it will fall in place. The resolutions detailed who will maintain the road and the water and sewer lines. Cangleska, Inc. of Kyle was given approval at the spring meetings to apply to USDA for water and sewer funding. They are hoping for a 100 percent funding from USDA.

"We don't have a contractor and can't get one until the infrastructure is resolved," Patton said. We can't do major commitments regarding the new store, until those infrastructure plans are in place and have timelines, she said. She said they can't take the chance of building, until they have what is needed for the sewer, water and roads.

More discussion will be held at at meeting on Nov. 16 at the health center at 8:30 p.m.

Planning the infrastructure for the new grocery store and theatres has been frustrating for Patton, "Are we land developers or future business people," she said. There are no earmarked monies for the infrastructure development, only continuing budgets that don't allow for development. So the planning takes more than designing the infrastructure, but commitments from the entities involved, "if" they will be done and "when", she said.

In the meantime, the site work will begin this week for the Wota and Nunpa Theatres with leveling the land, and putting in the culverts for the road.

On one side of the building will be a grocery store featuring four check out lanes, a customer service, a produce and diary department and the other side of the building will be two movie theatres, one will seat about 70 people and the other, about 100 people, including handicap seats.

issue as incumbent, President Bordeaux, was sworn in by Judge Marshall at 2:30 p.m.

After the swearing-in ceremony, a prayer was said followed by a honoring song by the Red Leaf drum group.

A wiping of the tears or 'ista mni bakintapi' ceremony was held for St. Francis council representative, Mike Boltz, who recently lost a grandson. Lester Kills The Enemy said a prayer in which he explained that the purpose was to strengthen Mike and welcome him back into the circle after a mourning period of four days. Pat Bad Hand explained that the late uncle Leo Chase In Timber said people used to grieve for a year before going out into public, but now four days is the norm.

Later, each council representative introduced themselves over KINI FM radio for those unable to attend the historic ceremony. The new RST council will be charged with implementing several amendments which were passed by the Sicangu Nation this summer. Council terms will be staggered, while term limits will be in place, as well as enrollment by lineal descent which will likely increase the tribal population.

On the official agenda was the appointment of new 2007-2009 RST constitutional officers, which will be done by popular vote the next time around, as well as planning for the inauguration ceremonies of President Bordeaux. Current RST secretary, Gerri Night Pipe was re-elected by the tribal council for another term, while Louis Wayne Boyd replaced current treasurer, Mary Greaves as the new RST treasurer. Finally, former tribal chairman, Webster Two Hawk, was elected as the new Sergeant-At-Arms.

Newly elected Rosebud council representative, William "Bebe" Long said that he wanted to introduce legislation immediately to restrict council travel and reduce their salaries. Okreek representative, Steve DeNoyer said that he wanted to install the youth affairs program which was cut during the last council term. He said, "We need to put our focus as a priority on the youth." Louis Good Voice Eagle from Horse Creek and Corn Creek expressed his appreciation to all of the grandpas and grandmas who supported his election bid. He said, "I am an advocate for the elders and the youth. They are looking for role-models. We need to humble ourselves in front of them."

Finally, Claudette Sabors of Grass Mountain community said, "I hope we all work together and bring some dignity back to the council chambers. Let's work it out if there is a problem. The people who elected me are my bosses."

tion at Crazy Horse Mountain and did a keynote address to the Headstart Conference in Rapid City, "I'll be attending a number of pow wows throughout the year, visiting schools in the area, working to be a positive role model for all of our youth and working to encourage and support more creative arts in our education system across the reservation and beyond; more opportunities in creative arts will give our youth more choices and a chance to choose something other than gangs, violence, drugs or alcohol."

Bordeaux remembers when she participated in the Teca Wacipi Okolakiciye and would look up to all of the royalty and thought it would be good to be a positive role model for our youth and to stay in touch with our culture.

"This year will help me make a transition, to become an adult, I've been a student for 16 years of my life," said Bordeaux, "this will help me grow as a person and as a woman, it'll help me reach more kids and make more of a difference - if I have self confidence in myself, it will help more of our youth to realize or work for the same level of confidence."

To be eligible for the position of Miss He Sapa Win, you need to be between the ages of 18 and 25, be an enrolled member of a Black Hills area tribe, be alcohol and drug free, write and submit an essay and elicit a number of letters of recommendation. In the talent portion, Minnie read poetry, some of her own and some other authors; she was interviewed by a panel of judges about her future goals and about her platform and she was required to do an introduction during one of the grand entries and answer a question publicly.

"I knew I was not your stereotypical "res" chick, it was nerve-racking though, to be judged," said Bordeaux, "I wish I knew my Lakota language better though, we have such a rich culture and the language ties us to our ancestors."

Minnie said that it wasn't until she got her degree and went to the Institute in Santa Fe that she realized that she had a lot of passion for Native performing arts, that she has a lot of ideas and that she wants to support native artists.

"During this year, I want to a positive example for Native women, I see myself as a forward thinker, thinking out of the box at times," said Bordeaux, "I really want to do film and I want to come back to the plains area and help network Lakota filmmaking, there are lot of really talented artists who just happen to be native, not only beads, feathers and horses, I want to be a screenwriter, write stories; there are a lot of stories out there and not just ones about abuse, drugs and alcohol - I'm a newcomer just wanting to figure out how to create my own path into that world."

Elizabeth Cook-Lynn to present at OLC

KYLE - Woksape Tipi Academic and Public Library at Oglala Community College in Kyle will be hosting author Elizabeth Cook-Lynn on Friday, Nov. 16 from 1 p.m. until 3 p.m. for a book signing and question and answer session. Elizabeth Cook-Lynn, considered one of the founding scholars of Native American Studies is the author of her most recent book "New Indians, Old Wars" from University of Illinois Press. Cook-Lynn is a writer, poet, and professor emerita of Native American studies at Eastern Washington University.

Cecelia Montgomery:
97 years old and still going

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - This past Friday, on Nov. 2, the community of Kyle helped Cecelia Montgomery "Wanbli Waste Win" celebrate her 97th birthday.

This year's birthday celebration was coordinated by her grandchildren and her great grandchildren, many friends and family attended the birthday celebration. She was honored with gifts, precious words and a tribal flag and plaque was presented to her by the Oglala Sioux Tribe. She is now living among her seventh generation of family and has lived in Kyle for the past seven years after living at Rapid City for many years.

Cecelia was born Nov. 2, 1920 at Three Mile Creek, west of Kyle. She was the oldest of ten children and is the only one left. Her parents were Sophie and Ambrose Hernandez. Her father was a cattleman and her great grandfather came from old Mexico as a cattleman.

She has seven children, three of them are still with her, a son and two daughters. All three live in Rapid City. She said she has more than 30 grandchildren and numerous great grandchildren. "I lost count of them, so I can't tell you how many I have," she said. She also raised her grandson Tad Montgomery, who attended Little Wound High School. Since he was little, she taught him to speak fairly fluent Lakota.

Cecelia still leads an active life, despite having hip replacement and recovered from brain surgery, where she had blood clots removed.

"I am a day older, and deeper in debt," she said. "I seem to be in good health." "The Lord isn't ready for me yet. St. Peter won't let me in the door," she teased. She said has lived a good life and is happy to be living in Kyle, where she likes it. She lives with her grandchildren and part of her day includes going to the Kyle Senior Citizen center to eat and socialize.

The last time she lived in Kyle was in the 1930s, where her and her husband John Montgomery worked at the school. "The town of Kyle sure grew, it spread all over," she said.

Cecelia is a devout Catholic and her faith has given her strength in life and has kept her in good health. She met her husband John at Genoa Indian School in 1929 and they were married in 1932.

He was veteran of the United States Navy. They raised their children in Rapid City and her husband died in 1978.

Cecelia is a storyteller and can weave story after story about her life and the changes she has seen in her lifetime. "I always remember the old days, how the changes came about, and there have been lots of changes up to this day," she said.

She went to the school at Holy Rosary Mission boarding school and at Genoa Indian School, where she learned music, she played the organ and the piano and even played the saxophone she said. With those skills, she enjoyed playing at services and at community functions. It was a gift she loved sharing until her eyes got bad and she couldn't read the notes anymore. "I cried because I couldn't see the notes anymore," she said. She hoped someone in her family would carry on the love of music.

Her name Wanblee Waste Win was given to her by her Grandmother Good Moccasin. It was done in traditional naming ceremony. "Nowadays we don't do that anymore," she said.

Students at Oglala Lakota College's television vocational program recently filmed an interview with Cecelia and broadcast it on the college's station KOLC, a feed from Golden West Telecommunications.

In the interview, Cecelia talked about her life with her husband, her children and how their life was when they moved to Rapid City. She spoke of the discrimination they experienced as Indians living in the city in the 1940s.

During that time, establishments still had signs that said, No Indians Allowed. She recalled working at a café and moving her way up to a salad lady, then a breakfast cook. Regarding racism, she stayed strong in her attitude as "I am just as good as you."

She spoke of the Indian camp near the creek, where many Indians lived. The Indian camp is where the old packing plant used to be. She said it wasn't long before the city complained about the Indian camp and they took it down. The Indians moved back to the reservation or elsewhere in the city.

She said in 1953, the Sioux Addition was developed on some 20 acres, north of Rapid City. "It was like a prairie dog town, we went without water and lived like that for about 17 years, pretty soon the city put lights up for us," she recalled.

Eventually more homes were built and it now called Lakota Homes. At meeting when the city decided to establish lights for the Sioux Addition, Cecelia said she trilled, "lee lee lee." "We are as good at they are,' she said.

Lakota Funds honors first loan client

Jennifer Richards
Information Specialist
Lakota Funds

KYLE - Lakota Funds was blessed with the honor of presenting Milton Fineran, our first loan client, a certificate of appreciation Sept. 24.

Milton said "I first heard about starting a bank on Pine Ridge at the Tatanka Iyacin conference and applied for the loan the following year at the conclusion of the 20/20 conference held at Piya Wiconi in 1987. I was the first one to apply. I was a full-time college student at the time and needed some way of supporting myself for the summer. My plan was to set up concession stands at all the area Pow-wows for the summer. It worked out great as I more than doubled the loan amount in profits, fixed my ride up a nd was even able to hire 3-4 people near the end of the summer season. I went on to finish my studies at OLC that academic year, go to Europe in the spring and graduate in June with my Bachelors in Human Services. (Dowel Smith was the chair of the department at the time). I still think it's a great idea to have a lending service right in the community and I encourage others in the community to look into applying for a loan."

This year Lakota Funds has provided 14 loans to tribal members this past year in 2007 to assist with their various dreams of small business success. With every successful loan the Lakota Funds approves there is more opportunity for future business entrepreneurs to begin their vision of a new business for their family and community.

The Lakota Funds and Wawokiye Business Institute have scheduled or rescheduled the following three activities in November:

1) Lakota Funds Homebuyer Club Meeting-Monday, Nov. 7 at 6 p.m. at Eagle Nest College Center in Wanblee.

2) Free Financial Literacy Classes-First class begins Wednesday, Nov. 21 at 5 p.m. at the Pine Ridge College Center in Pine Ridge

3) Native American Artist Meeting-Monday, Nov. 26 at 6 to 8 p.m. at the Manderson College Center in Manderson. Please call 455-2500 if you have any questions about any of these activities or need more information.

Walk to Iraq and back meeting

PINE RIDGE - A Walk to Iraq and Back meeting has been scheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 13 at 12 noon in the Health Administration Conference Room. The meeting will cover organizing the Christmas Packet mailings for deployed soldiers overseas. Planning will also begin for the Lakota Nation Invitational Opening Ceremony Walk will be discussed. Maker of Tanka Bar first to be honored in new Pine Ridge Chamber project

KYLE - Following a string of long days spent methodically packing boxes with its signature buffalo and cranberry Tanka Bars, the owners of Native American Natural Foods admit that only a few weeks after its official launch, the company is working overtime to keep up with its own success.

And now that success is being recognized by the Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce under its new "Business of the Month" project. According to Ivan Sorbel, executive director of the Chamber, the project will honor a different Pine Ridge Reservation-based business each month.

"We are so honored to be chosen by the Chamber," said Karlene Hunter, CEO of Native American Natural Foods, which is headquartered in Kyle. "This start-up period has been a real challenge for us, and this recognition really puts a spotlight on what we're trying to accomplish."

Overwhelming demand for Native American Natural Foods' Tanka Bars and Tanka Bites has taken the tiny company by surprise. Following major national press coverage by The Associated Press and The New York Times, calls to Native American Natural Food's toll-free number exploded.

"The orders started rolling in before our launch date," said President Mark Tilsen. "Basically, we were sold out of our initial run before we could even officially launch the product. We have inquiries from several national chains that we have not even begun to address."

Since Tanka Bars are essentially artisanal-style products, trying to ramp up production quickly to meet the demand has been a real challenge, according to Mr. Tilsen. Each bar is slow-smoked for nine hours.

"We've had a couple of missteps these past few weeks," he said. "We underestimated demand and we had a packaging machine issue that put us behind in our production."

Even though Tanka Bar production is running behind its original schedule, the orders keep rolling in. According to Ms. Hunter, Native American Natural Foods is working on an agreement to add a second meat processing plant, which would exponentially increase its production capability.

"Our build-out plan always included increasing production capacity," she said. "We just didn't realize we would have to implement that solution so soon."

The company hopes to announce the addition of the second plant in the next few weeks. In the meantime, the staff at Native American Natural Foods is working its way through the original order backlog.

"I guess there are worse things than having a product people seem to really want," Ms. Hunter said.

According to Mr. Sorbel, the "Business of the Month" project is funded by an Administration for Native Americans grant in the amount of $195,490 for 2007-2008. The new project, titled Marketing Alliance Project, will focus on a number of marketing ideas for Chamber members and other businesses on the Pine Ridge Reservation, including "Business of the Month," continual radio programming on KILI, Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce web site development and a "Shop Local" campaign.

Giago among four to be inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame

BROOKINGS - Four longtime newspapermen with outstanding careers in South Dakota journalism will be inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame on Nov. 10 in Brookings.

The four honorees include: Wayne Bertrand, former publisher and editor of weekly newspapers in Scotland, Tyndall and Springfield; Gordon Garnos, former editor of the Watertown Public Opinion; Tim Giago, founding publisher and editor of Indian Country Today; and Ralph Nachtigal, former publisher and editor of the Platte Enterprise.

The four newspapermen will be honored at a Nov. 10 luncheon at the Performing Arts Center on the campus of South Dakota State University. The luncheon begins at 11 a.m.

Preceding the luncheon, a ceremony to unveil a new display for the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame will be held at 10:30 a.m. in the first-floor lobby of Anson and Ada May Yeager Hall on the SDSU campus. Bronze plaques recognizing all 100 Newspaper Hall of Fame members are displayed in the lobby of the SDSU journalism building, which is named for former longtime Sioux Falls Argus Leader editor and Hall of Fame member Anson Yeager and his wife.

Tim Giago, a member of the Oglala Lakota Tribe, founded the Lakota Times on the Pine Ridge Reservation in 1981. Giago and his newspaper withstood firebombs, office windows shot out and multiple death threats. The newspaper was renamed Indian Country Today in 1992. Giago served as editor and publisher for 18 years, building it into the largest independent Indian newspaper before selling it in 1998. He started the Lakota Journal in 2000 and served as its editor and publisher until his retirement in 2004. He was a founder and first president of the Native American Journalists Association. He was awarded the prestigious Nieman Fellowship in Journalism to Harvard University in 1990. His weekly column, "Notes from Indian Country," appears in newspapers across the country and on prominent news Web sites. He will be the first Native American ever inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame.

The SDSU Department of Journalism and Mass Communications has been home to the Newspaper Hall of Fame ever since it was established in 1934.

Lakota Wicoiye

By Frances Apple

Lakota social control

(Editor's NoteThe following the translation for the Lakota Wicoiye article 'Wo'ignu')

Because our Lakota Language was so sacred (wakan), there was no room for any foul language.

There was a Lakota word which was used very effectively to keep each other in check- "The shame system."

That powerful word was Woignu. Which pertains to a truth about a person or a family member.

Let me share a story of this example. A young lady in the community who became well-off was putting people down because they lacked material possessions. One day she rubbed one of the elders wrong so to speak. So the elder brought her past up in front of the Oyate. She said- "Is this the woman whose family used to live in a tent during severe cold winters?" The elder put the young lady into abyss.

Today the new age don't talk about our sacred language so our Lakota values and the sacred circle (cangleska) is fast disintegrating.

OST Council special session: report reveals impeachable offenses

By Natalie Hand
Special to the Times

In a special session of the OST Council on Monday, Nov. 5, 2007, the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council Oglala Delegation and Bring Back The Way presented the Council with a "Findings Report on Native American Energy Group."

Debra White Plume, Director of Bring Back The Way, read the 11-page report to the Council, citing that through meetings, court testimony, and subpoenaed documents, there is evidence that, "… OST President John Steele… exhibited unethical and dishonest conduct in his relationship of action and inaction with the Native American Energy Group."

Additionally, the report shows that Steele acted in collusion with Eileen Janis, former OST employee, in a scheme to misrepresent the Oglala Sioux Tribe while meeting with N.A.E.G. investors in New York City. N.A.E.G. invited Steele and Janis to the meeting to promote a multi-phase uranium mining project on Pine Ridge. The report urges the tribal council to take legal action against Janis, based on criminal acts of fraud, forgery, and perjury she committed while working as N.A.E.G.'s liaison.

Treaty Council Delegate Floyd Hand called for impeachment proceedings to begin against Steele based on the report findings. Hand further requested that tribal ordinances be enforced that would ban tribal members from OST employment if they have committed "dishonorable acts", such as fraud or embezzling. "If this council refuses to take action, we will through federal court."

Wounded Knee District Representative Kathy Janis asked Steele to respond to the report. Steele stated, "There was never any relationship with N.A.E.G. The tribe was never in any harm." Pine Ridge District Representative, Ella John Carlow, asked, "Why didn't you ever send N.A.E.G. to a standing committee?" Steele responded that there was no reason to do that because there was no relationship.

The tribal council advised Hand that there is a procedure to follow and encouraged him to put the complaint in writing and submit it to the OST Secretary. The purpose of this meeting was to hear a complaint and motion for impeachment against OST Secretary Elizabeth Waters for altering tribal meeting minutes and resolutions. Valerie Two Eagle, the complaintant, argued that Waters altered wording in a tribal resolution. The tribal council voted 9 for, 5 against to dismiss the charge and verbally reprimanded Waters for her conduct.

Letters to the Editor

If we are do something about Lakota language loss, we must first admit the reality of it

Dear Editor,

Finally, the plight of our Lakota language is in the news, locally at least. I am referring to the recent articles by L*akota Country Times* Correspondent Tom Crash. Historically, indigenous language loss was never an item of interest for the greater public.

Actually, a small group of early Europeans engaged heartily in turning our language into a written one.

It was not until 1970 that the consequences of that effort appeared in a book titled That These People May Live (Maynard & Twiss). Although that study involved nearly all areas of reservation life, it indicates a definite decline in language use among Lakota speakers. Recent studies indicate a continuing decline.

Although there may be more studies and surveys, I am only aware of two during the 1990s. The first is Time of Awakening (Karlene Hunter, 1994).

The second is Accessing Lakota Language Shift, (Karen Lone Hill, 1997). Then, as Tom Crash indicated in his story, there is the most recent survey completed by Pete and Sandy Catches of Calico.

These scholarly works established the fact that language loss has been occurring for a long time. As real as it is though, many are still are unwilling to grasp it - refusing to acknowledge the truth of the matter. Language loss is not a delusion; it is real. If we are to do something about our situation, we must first acknowledge the reality of it.

Although tribal legislative ordinances have the force of law, some of our public officials tried to curb this ongoing decline via resolutions and proclamations.

I think these people deserve honorable mention for their attempts to dissuade the possible death of our beloved Lakota language. Presented here are our tribal government's executive and legislative efforts.

President Paul Iron Cloud signed Executive Resolution No. 90-06XB on Jan.10, 1990 to establish the Lakota language as an official language. Vice-president Harold Salway, for Paul Iron Cloud, signed OST Resolution No. 90-14 on Jan. 12, 1990 to "establish the Lakota language as the official language of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

President Wilbur Between Lodges signed OST Resolution No. 94-64 on May 16, 1994, which supports "the Medicine Root District/Communities' application for funding to develop a community driven language development initiative to preserve, enhance, and assure the survival and continuing vitality of the Lakota Language".

Vice-president Mel Lone Hill signed OST Resolution No. 95-26 on Feb. 23, 1995 declaring "the second Wednesday in February annually as Lakota Language Day on the Pine Ridge Reservation" and that "a summit be called to make a document assessment of Lakota language." It also directs all tribal programs to support language preservation.

President John Steele signed Resolution No. 02-133XB on Aug.1, 2002 approving "the Lakota Language Consortium, encouraging schools on the Pine Ridge Reservation to participate and requesting the United States Congress to support Lakota language revitalization."

It states that the Executive Committee "supports the goals, strategies, and measures of the Lakota Language Consortium, to reverse the problem of Lakota language loss, and to return the language to its former levels of use, both spoken and written."

It further recommends "school boards, administrators, and teachers, in all schools to join the consortium and support the revival of the language." Lastly, I know there is a Presidential Proclamation in the tribal archives because I recall seeing a photocopy of that particular document in 1997.

The unilateral effort to turn our language into a written one is long (230 years). The earliest written form of our language appeared in 1778 as a short Vocabulary of the Nadowessie Language (Jonathan Carver). Carver, an early explorer, studied the language three years prior.

Then an Italian, Giacomo Costantino Beltrami, did some work in the spring-early summer of 1823 along the northern tributaries of the Mississippi and Minnesota Rivers. His work, published more than 170 years later, is The Sioux Vocabulary, 1823 (Lakota Books, 1995).

Dakota Educator, Carolynn I. Cavendar Schommer (Forward to Reprint, Dakota/English Dictionary, MN Historical Society, 1992) noted that missionaries Samuel W. and Gidgeon Pond, Steven R. Riggs, and Dr. Thomas S. Williamson were in the forefront, among scholars, linguists, and anthropologists, in transforming an oral language into written form.

In 1852, Rev. Riggs produced a Grammar and Dictionary of the Dakota Language and in 1892 produced a Dakota-English Dictionary. In 1886 Rev. William P. Williamson (son of Dr. Williamson) published a Dakota-English Dictionary and in 1893 a Grammar, Texts, and Ethnology and finally in 1902, an English-Dakota Dictionary.

Reverend Eugene Beuchel (Wanbli Sapa-Black Eagle) published a Bible History (1923), in 1939 A Grammar of Lakota, and in 1970 a Lakota-English Dictionary.

Dr. Agnes Picotte published An Introduction to Basic Dakota, Lakota, Nakota (Dakota Indian Foundation, Inc., 1987). Subsequently, several local residents also developed language texts: Sidney Keith, Ellis Brings Him Back, and Max Blacksmith (all deceased). Albert White Hat (Rosebud Lakota) is the latest author of a book on the Lakota language.

So, what does all this mean? We have a long history of effort to transform our ancient oral language into a written one.

This is okay; however, we have some quirks; 1) each work is different from its previous one leaving us with a confusing array of orthographies and 2) it contributes to sapping the strength of the oral use of the language.

Since 1976, every elementary and high school on the Pine Ridge engaged in "teaching" Lakota language under federal bilingual education guidelines and its constrained funding.

As part of this group, I can say we tried everything available to us: dictionaries, linguistic training, culturally relevant materials, language masters, audio/video recordings, and CD-ROM.

Despite all the applied technology and millions of dollars spent, recent surveys tell us the language is still dying. My only hope is that someone will accept this history and apply it to reviving our language. It is vital for our youth to be able to know how, why, and what happened, what we did, and more importantly, what to avoid.

The bottom line is we used everything available to us to transmit our language and fell seriously short.

Now, I am convinced that we cannot teach language as a separate single unit, which is exactly what we did for three decades. Like the spokes of a wheel, Wicowoglake (language) is only one part of a complex unit embracing several interdependent essentials.

Other cultural essentials completing the wheel or the multifaceted tiospaye are: Otokahe wicowoyake (Creation chronicles); Wowakan (Spiritual teachings/rites); Wowicala (Belief system); wowahokunkiye (Imparting cultural knowledge); and Wicowe/Wotakuye (generational protocol). Of course, there are others and they all go hand-in-hand.

In my opinion, three recent developments seem to stand out as pillars of hope for our children as well as our language: Wakanyeja Pawicayapi Inc., the tribe's new Child and Family Code, and immersion schools.

Echoing Mr. Brian Charging Cloud's comment though, a nagging question remains, "Are we capable of working together?"

Finding My Voice

By Dana Lonehill

A challenge to live on $3 a day for food

Last week, I opened the Rapid City Journal to see on the front page a challenge issued out to South Dakotans everywhere. The challenge is from the food stamp office and food banks everywhere to try and live for one week on what the state issues out in food stamps per person.

The challenge is for $21 in one week. That includes three meals a day so basically you would take it as one dollar per meal. Do you think you can live on just three bucks a day?

I do get food stamps, so I know how hard it is to make it stretch from one month to the next. In fact, you can't do it, it's impossible when you have two teenage boys and a nine year old boy who eats like a horse and is the only documented member of my extended family that could eat two whole Indian tacos in a row. It don't matter if you use coupons, your food stamps never cover you from one month to the next. That is when it is handy to have relatives with magical commodity cupboards that appear out of nowhere.

So I contacted the people who are putting on this challenge and they told me that it was nice for me to offer to do the challenge but not when I am already a recipient of food stamps.

So here is my reason for doing the challenge. I have a few readers on two different blogging websites plus the few people who read my column from the bathroom. I would like to bring awareness to them for that one week and have already recruited a couple not from South Dakota into taking the challenge with me. I would also like to better budget myself, so maybe this will help. Plus, who knows I might lose weight.

I was told some of the Senators took this challenge and the outcome was not good.

So being that you only have $21 there are some rules and guidelines.

You can't use food you already own. Like your own salt, sugar, ketchup. Although you can take them from places you may eat at, not like stealing...but you know what I mean. Take more than you use, and don't act like none of you don't have a junk drawer at home full of condiments. Big Bat and Patty, I will pay you back with a cheap plug at the end here.

Here are the GUIDELINES

Spend only $21 on food and beverages during the week for your total food intake.

In other words,

o Include in the total all food purchased and eaten during the Challenge week, including fast food and dining out.

o Do not eat food you already own. (A family fleeing domestic violence would not have garden produce or even seasonings or condiments, though they might pick up salt & pepper packets somewhere.)

o Avoid accepting free food from friends, family, at work or elsewhere.

o Exclude sales tax from your $21. Fortunately, food stamp purchases are not taxed.

So by next week when I am looming in front of my deadline, I will only be two days into this challenge. If I say anything that offends you, let me apologize now because I might not be in the best of moods from all the oatmeal I will be eating.

So do you think you have it in you to take this challenge. I think if I can do it, you can. To anyone related to me, no taking bets on how long I will last...you might curse me.

Anyone interested in taking the challenge can email sdfoodstampchallenge@gmail or you can check out the challenge here on their blog http://www.sdchallenge.blogspot.com/.

So wish me luck and remember to shop at Big Bat's, but probably not if you're going to take this challenge. (That's my cheap plug for the extra ranch dressing I took.)

Cross country, volleyball, football wrapping up, its hooping time!

Coaching turnover makes impact on upcoming season

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PORCUPINE - Officially, the girl's basketball season gets underway, Monday, Nov. 19 when the first formal practices may be held. The boy's season starts the following Monday, Nov. 26. Some schools have been holding open gyms for the interested ballplayers, some have a conditioning program going on to get the players ready for the upcoming season.

Cross country finished with the State cross country meet on Oct. 20 in Huron; football is wrapping up this week with State championship games in the Dakota Dome in Vermillion while girl's volleyball is set for their last act with all three state competitions scheduled for next week in Sioux Falls.

On the girl's side of the basketball, the two state tournament teams, Cheyenne Eagle Butte and Red Cloud both have new coaches; Alissa Kingfisher Benoist is now coaching the Lady Braves, she was Arlyn Wohlleber's assistant last year and Jerome LeBeau is the new girl's coach at Red Cloud, Ted Standing Soldier Jr.'s contract was not renewed after a parent led campaign convinced the administration to look elsewhere. Standing Soldier is now coaching the girls at Little Wound, Mary Tobacco chose not to put in for the job.

Dusty LeBeau is returning to coaching after a three year lay-off, he will coach the Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes, a team ranked number one last year with a 20-0 record late in the season before losing to Bennett County in the District 14A finals; Dusty last coached in the 2003/2004 season where he took both the girls and boys from Pine Ridge to state tournaments, losing the State A girl's championship game to Sisseton. Bill Mendoza stepped down after one year as head coach.

Shawn Peterson will coach the girls at Takini, Fran Vogel at Crazy Horse and Cory Roberts will return at St. Francis while Roger Crow Eagle chose not to return to Todd County. Todd County is presenting a person to the board next week for approval.

On the boy's side of basketball, long time coach, Jess Mendoza returns for another season at Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Jess has taken ten teams to state tourneys, Pine Ridge four times, 84, 85, 86 and 87, winning it all in 1987 and Eagle Butte six times in 94, 95, 98, 99, 01 and 03, taking fifth in 98. Bill Pourier returns to Pine Ridge, Mike Hammer to Todd County, Shannon Jewett to Takini, Luke MacLean to Crazy Horse and Matt Rama to Red Cloud.

Rob Mendoza is replacing Jamie Feather Earring at Little Wound and St. Francis has yet to select a boy's coach.

Hammer and Todd County lost to Little Wound in the Region 7A finals last year while Rama and Red Cloud lost to St. Thomas More in the Region 8A finals; Little Wound and More played for the State A championship last year, the Cavaliers winning their second straight championship. Todd County and Red Cloud will both be banging on the door to state again this year, both looking to earn their ticket to State.

The State A girl's tournament will be in Watertown while the boy's will be in Sioux Falls.

November is Diabetes Awareness Month...

The RST Diabetes Prevention Program will be hosting a number of activities during the month of November in observance of National Diabetes Awareness Month.

Connie Brushbreaker, director, and her staff would like to encourage all communities in the Rosebud Reservation to take control of their health.....Do you know your Risk for Diabetes? Keep in mind that "Diabetes Prevention is Proven, Possible and Powerful"

- Stay fit, even walking to the store counts!!!!
- Eat healthy, give your kids a good example...say NO to pop
- And visit your doctor at least once every year and ask to be screened for diabetes risk!

The monthly activities are:

I. "Global Diabetes Day 4 Directions Walk" Wednesday, November 14 8:30 am in Rosebud, (Tribal Building)
II. "Holiday fat burning 5K Walk/run" November 24, Saturday after Thanksgiving, at 9:00 am Rosebud, (Tribal Building)
III. "Native American Diabetes Awareness Day Walk", November 30, at 10:00am wherever you are at the time... 1 block or 1 mile, let's unite in prayer and give support to those with the disease and those who lost their battle.

For additional information call: 747-4600 or visit us on the web at:
www.rstdpp.com

Gather your friends, family, co-workers, neighbors, or anyone who would partner with you and walk for as little or as much as you can handle!!!!

Oyate Teca Project activities for November

KYLE - The Oyate Teca Project is taking new enrollments throughout the month of November for interested parents who want to enroll their child for a sponsor. Parents are invited to stop by their local CAP when the Oyate Teca Project is in their district or stop by the office located a half mile north of Angel's Store in Kyle.

Parents will need to bring the following items to enroll their child:

1) Income Verification

2) Child/children must be present for photo to be taken

3) Copy of Immunization Record for children 0-24 months that are being enrolled.

4) Completed Application (staff will have them available)

The Oyate Teca Project is Affiliated with the Christian Children's Fund. A reminder to those parents who apply for sponsorship that it does take awhile to receive a sponsor for a child. Parents should cooperate with the program by updating their family card on a yearly basis, keep their address updated and notify the office of any changes in information.

All reported information is confidential. Oyte Teca Project is currently collecting completed Child Progress Reports and are asking all parents to bring their child/children in to complete CPR's for their sponsors.

These are due once a year, and any child that has not completed one by the deadline on December 15, 2007 will be removed from the program. Parent's requesting additional information are invited to call 455-2544.

Whirlwind Soldier; disparity between "haves" and "have nots" growing

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - George Whirlwind Soldier, 63, is one of those Sicangu Lakota tribal members who you know is accomplished in life, but you never know in what regard unless you inquire. In recognition of the upcoming Veteran's Day observation, he agreed to sit for an interview and share some of the insights and philosophy he has gained over the course of a successful career as a Physician's Assistant and U. S. Army veteran.

George Whirlwind Soldier , Sicangu Lakota, is a retired physician's assistant and U. S. Army veteran who lives at the senior center in Rosebud and reports that the center is comfortable and secure.

A product of the boarding school environment he was fortunate enough to learn the Lakota language from his mother, who was a pipe carrier and a sun dancer. He said, "Lakota opens a lot of gates to understanding between ourselves and what is out there. Each of us has a confidential relationship to tunkasila and we need to respect that in each other."

His parents are Pius and Evelyn Whirlwind Soldier who were from Bad Nation and siblings are Pius, Marie, Lydia, Louis and Clement. His late brother Clement is also a veteran and Veterans Day is a difficult reminder of the family's loss.

Whirlwind Soldier earned his Physician's Assistant credentials from the University of North Dakota in 1971 after serving in the U. S. Army from 1963-66 as a medic and field trauma technician. Many people do not know that he was one of the early protesters against UND using the nickname "Fighting Sioux" and allowing other caricatures to be used during sporting events.

He also earned college credit while attending South Dakota State University and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

His work years were spent with the Indian Health Service and National Health Service Corp in the southwest with the Havasupai tribe. He also worked in Tucson and Phoenix, AZ, Seattle, WA and then spent his last 12 working years with the Cheyenne River Sioux tribe.

Now retired and living in the Rosebud Senior Citizens center he reports that the quality of life is good there. He said, "At first I missed it, climbing the walls with nothing to do. You learn how to kick back. There are a lot of things that can and should be done. There is a lot of disparity between the "haves" and "have nots."

He says that people tend to be forgotten by the "haves" and once they get to the top they pull the ladder up. Whirlwind Soldier seems to possess a wealth of knowledge as he has traveled extensively and even read the Koran. His ability to reflect back on life is indicative of someone who has lived life to the fullest and learned from it.

His grandfather often told him that no matter what the obstacle, "Give it time, take care of it and it will subside." He said no one has patience these days. Alcohol represented an obstacle for Whirlwind Soldier, however, he learned to cope with it. He said, "Alcohol became a big deal in my life. I was a functioning alcoholic. If we can keep one young person from doing that, it is a dead end. I have been sober for seven years."

"I grew up anti-social, rebellious and cried a lot of tears in life. Tears of anguish and frustration" he said as he continued to describe what he believes is a healthy lifestyle. He said "The way toward a healthy life is the Lakota way, non-alcoholic, non-violent and the way of the pipe."

Having come back home to Rosebud a couple times in his life to live and work, he said, "We should appreciate being here on the reservation, instead of pre-occupied with the bad." At the senior center, life is good, the food is good; the place is secure and comfortable. He also praised the Rosebud Ambulance Service as being the best in the state.

Whirlwind Soldier is also a traditional dancer and he and Ted Standing Soldier took it upon themselves to spearhead an effort to honor a young Lakota soldier who spent two tours in Iraq.

The young soldier, Richard O'Rourke, was honored at the Rosebud Sioux tribe's Veteran's Affairs building over the weekend by some 100 people.

An accomplished Lakota veteran, Whirlwind Soldier has seen both good and bad and traveled the world. He worked at the bottom of the Grand Canyon with the Havasupai and visited a beautiful cathedral in Paris, France and all the while managed to return to his homeland on the Rosebud after such rich and diverse experiences. He said, "Blihiciyapo. Canku luta akan omanipi tehki elo - Be strong, the red road upon which you walk is tough."

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have a number of personal concerns I wish to share with you, and I also have a few questions to ask of you. My dilemma seems to revolve around the situation of uncertainty between my son's mom and myself, at the time being I am living here with my son, with the ex living out of state. I have to admit my ex is a good mother, to all her children; she had kids from a previous relationship.

Let me say it was never my intention to be a single parent, and I'll admit my ex and I tried several times to work things out, always separated though. Her reasons were I wasn't a good step dad to her older children and I wasn't sensitive to her feelings and lacked maturity; note she's several years older.

So is she right? Personally I am doubtful now if I could be a good step dad and if I could ever meet her sensitivity and maturity that she wants in a partner. Right now all I can be is me, in time I know my prospective of values will hopefully improve. So do I continue to believe maybe one day my ex will see the potential I see in myself?

You see it's important to me to know where I stand in my ex's life, unfortunately she hasn't clarified what she really wants when it comes out, only to realize once again we can't stand each other.

As for my son, I feel its unhealthy for him to be volley balled back and forth, so if the relationship with my ex is really over, would it be better for my son to stay in one place, with one parent, if so it is a wise decision to file custody, will I win if I do? The last question I have hardly relates to the above letter, but does have a value of importance; I need to find a data, disk, where can I find it?

Walks the hard road

Dear Walks the hard road:

It is somewhat traditional among women and men that are unhappy in their relationships to come up with "reasons" why the other person is not a good mate.

Your ex has her so-called reasons...and to her they may be true; but personally, I wouldn't take it too personally. I tend not to believe what my exes think about me...because they do not have a very healthy respect for who I am and how I think. Does that make sense to you?

What may appear to be immature to one person will not feel that way to another. Am I immature if I slide down the slide at the park? If I yell at a football game? If I eat candy and it melts in my hands and gets on my clothes and my face? If I burp after dinner? Am I immature if I laugh at dumb jokes? If I make faces when something doesn't taste good to me? If I yell out loud when I bump my head? If I cheat at checkers or Monopoly when I play them with my kids, or make up words in Scrabble? Am I immature if I only have $10 to my name and I give it to a friend? If I sing off key really loudly in my car to the radio? If I fight with you over the last cookie or piece of pie? I think I am fine, but a person that doesn't like me very much would think I am immature. Nuff said. My thirty year old son said, who wants to be old and boring, there is plenty of time for that after your funeral. Immaturity is the spice of adulthood. Find someone who enjoys your immaturity.

Were you a good step-parent? You have to answer that. It isn't easy stepping in and up for parenting a child of a spouse. It is fraught with pitfalls. Different approaches to parenting, rights of the step-parent to correct behavior, approaches in conversation, discipline principles, spiritual understandings, the ages of the children, attitudes of passiveness, and the attitudes of the children.

You have to fall in love with children, in my opinion, in order to be a good parent of any kind. Love is always the key and the best point of origin to come from. You had a tough time, and were constantly being tested during your parenting attempts with your mate's children. There needs to be alignment between both parents, especially, when one is not a natural birth-parent. You guys were not aligned.

I am glad your mate is a good mother. That says everything. Do not inhibit the relationship between your son and his mother - even if you do not live in the same vicinity. I arranged with my ex (many years ago) to move out of state, and as a result, both of us agreed that every effort would be made to afford transportation and or a delivery system at regular intervals so that my ex could stay active in his son's life. I think any two reasonable adults that love a child can work together for the highest good of that child - which is to be involved with both parents (provided that the parents are reasonably good parents).

Should you go for custody? That seems smart to me. You already accept the majority of the responsibility for your son so legal custody just would make life simpler - however, I would avoid a battle and making prohibiting rules. Yes, you can get full custody, and this would be very easy if your ex agrees, so approach her with your heart and your brain and don't get pushy, nasty or personal.

Women's Health Update : Common Questions about HPV and Cervical Cancer

Information provided by the Women's Health Clinic at the Rosebud Indian Health Service Unit. For further questions or if you need the HPV vaccine, please call us at 605-747-3362. We care about your health!

What is HPV?

HPV is a common virus. There are about 40 types of HPV that affect the genitals or sex organs of men and women. Some HPV types can cause genital warts. Other types can infect a woman's cervix and lead to cervical cancer over many years. But most of the time, HPV causes no symptoms or health problems and goes away by itself within two years. Experts do not know why HPV goes away in so many, but not all women.

How did I get HPV? Who gave it to me?

HPV is passed on through genital contact, most often during vaginal and anal sex. Most people never even know they have HPV or that they are passing it to their partner. For this reason, it may not be possible to know who gave you HPV or when you got it. HPV is so common that most people get it soon after they start having sex. In cases when HPV does not go away on its own, it may only be found years later.

Are there other ways I could have gotten HPV?

There are many myths about how people get HPV. You cannot get HPV from being unclean, from toilet seats, or from having an abortion. Also, you are not more likely to get HPV from having rough sex or sex during your period.

How does HPV cause cervical cancer?

HPV can cause normal cells on your cervix to turn abnormal. Most of the time, HPV goes away on its own. When HPV goes away, your cervical cells go back to normal. But if HPV lingers for many years, these abnormal cells can turn into cancer.

Can I prevent cervical cancer?

Yes. You can get screening tests that can find early signs of cervical cancer before you ever get sick. That way, problems can be found and removed before they ever become cancer. The Pap test and HPV test are cervical cancer screening tests.

How is the Pap test different from the HPV test?

Both of these tests help screen for cervical cancer, but they look for different things. The Pap test looks for cell changes on your cervix that could develop into cervical cancer. The HPV test looks for HPV, the virus that can cause these cell changes.

How likely am I to get cancer if I have HPV?

Few women who have HPV get cervical cancer—as long as they follow their doctor's advice for needed testing or treatment. If you have HPV, your doctor may check up on you more often and do more tests to look for changes on your cervix. That way, your doctor can find and treat any changes early, so you don't get cervical cancer. Be sure to follow up with your doctor!

Is there a treatment for HPV?

There is no treatment for HPV, but most people's bodies do eventually fight the virus off. There are treatments for the health problems that HPV can cause—like genital warts, cervical cell changes, and cervical cancer. Once abnormal cells are treated (removed), you may need to get Pap tests more often to make sure they do not come back.

Will I have HPV forever?

In most women, HPV goes away within two years. We do not know why it lasts longer in some women than others.

If HPV goes away, can I get it again?

If you have one type of HPV that goes away, you may not get that type again. But you still can get a different type. Remember, there are about 40 types of HPV that can infect the genital area.

Does having HPV affect my chances of getting pregnant or having healthy babies?

Having HPV does not make it harder to get or stay pregnant. The type of HPV you have should not affect the health of your future babies. But if you need treatment for abnormal cells (caused by HPV), the treatment could affect your chance of having babies. Ask your doctor if your treatment can impact your ability to get pregnant.

Will I pass HPV to my current partner?

If you have HPV and have been with your partner for a while, your partner is likely to have HPV too. There is no way to know if your partner gave you HPV, or if you gave HPV to your partner.

Can I prevent passing HPV to a new partner?

Condoms may lower your chances of passing HPV to your new partner, if used all the time and the right way. But HPV can infect areas that are not covered by a condom—so condoms may not fully protect against HPV. The only sure way to prevent passing HPV to a partner is not to have sex.

Can my male partner get tested for HPV?

Right now, there is no HPV test for men. HPV is just as common in men as in women, but its health complications tend to be more serious in women. The types of HPV that put you at risk for cervical cancer rarely cause health problems for most men.

How do I talk to my partner about HPV?

You and your partner may benefit from talking openly about HPV. You can tell your partner that:

HPV is very common. It can infect the genital areas of both men and women. It usually has no signs or symptoms.

Most sexually active people get HPV at some time in their lives, though most will never know it. People with only one lifetime sex partner can get HPV, if their partner was infected with HPV.

Most of the time, the body fights off HPV naturally. But in some people, HPV does not go away.

There is no test yet for men to find out if they have HPV. But the most common health problem caused by HPV in men is genital warts. And the type of HPV found on your HPV test does not cause genital warts.

Partners who have been together for a while tend to share HPV. This means that your partner likely has HPV also, even though your partner may have no signs or symptoms.

Having HPV does not mean that you or your partner is having sex outside of your relationship. There is no sure way to know when you got HPV. A person can have HPV for many years before it is found.

If your sex partner is female, you should talk to her about the link between HPV and cervical cancer, and encourage her to get screened for cervical cancer.

I heard about a new HPV vaccine. Can it help me?

A new HPV vaccine is now available for females, ages 9 to 26 years. It protects against the four HPV types that cause most cervical cancers and genital warts. But it does not treat existing HPV, cervical cell changes, or genital warts. The vaccine will be most effective in females who have not yet had sex since they are unlikely to have HPV. But young sexually active females may still benefit. The vaccine has not yet been tested with women older than 26 years. It may be available one day for women over 26, if it is found to be safe and effective for them. In the meantime, if you are 26 years or younger, ask your doctor if this vaccine is right for you.

OLC set to start new year as tobacco free institution

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College in a press conference on Wednesday, announced effective Jan. 1, 2008, OLC will become a tobacco free campus at each of its college centers and the Piya Wiconi Administrative Headquarters.

The main administration buildings are located on the Piya Wiconi campus, west of Kyle and has 11 centers across the reservation, including a campus in Rapid City with an average of 1,400 students.

OLC has previously had its facilities smoke free, but at its August 2007 meeting, the OLC Board of Trustees passed a policy that campuses of each of the college centers and the Piya Wiconi Administrative Headquarter would be tobacco free effective January 1, 2008.

"I am proud of our decision to become a tobacco free campus," said Newton Cummings, OLC Board of Trustees president, "We are committed to providing a healthy, comfortable and productive environment for our students, faculty, and staff."

The policy prohibits the use of all tobacco products, including spit tobacco, on all Oglala Lakota College properties. The policy applies to students, faculty, staff and visitors and includes all college facilities, including buildings, sidewalks, parking lots, building entrances and common areas.

The policy has no effect on sacred use of traditional tobacco.

The OLC college centers are at Pine Ridge, Oglala, Batesland, Manderson, Porcupine, Rapid City, Allen, Martin, Kyle, Wanblee, and Eagle Butte. The OLC Nursing Program Campus had previously implemented a tobacco free campus.

"The reason that the Board of Trustees passed the new policy is that it wanted to send a message to our students, staff, and reservation citizens of its great concern that tobacco use causes major health problems with Indian people", stated OLC President Thomas Shortbull.

"Due to one of the highest uses of tobacco among racial groups, Indian people have a higher incidence of lung cancer, heart trouble, and other tobacco associated illnesses among Indian people." said Shortbull.

"Our college has a responsibility to its graduates to not only provide them with a fine education, but also put them on the path of a healthy lifestyle." Shortbull also said.

In its effort to reduce tobacco use, Oglala Lakota College applied for and received a $25,000 grant from the Tobacco Prevention Program with the South Dakota Department of Health.

The funding will be used to have tobacco cessation workshops with the OLC students.

For information, contact Thomas Shortbull at 605-455-6020 or Marilyn Pourier, OLC Development Director, at 605-455-6045.

Lakota language needs to be a gift that we give to each of our children

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

LAKOTA NATION - "We give each child a gift by teaching the Lakota language," said Wil Meya from the Lakota Language Consortium, "kids today get to be 18 or 19 and look back and say we've been fed 18 years of bs; teachers have bs'ed us all the way - we don't have an identity, we want to walk the walk, there has to be something there to be proud to be a Lakota."

Mike Carlow is a young man, a tribal member who did not grow up learning the language but today is the Lakota culture teacher at Wolf Creek School outside of Pine Ridge for students in grades K through eight. He also has been instrumental in the formation of a non-profit organization called Tusweca Tiospaye that is dedicated to the promotion and strengthening of the Lakota language on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

"Today, we are working with children to create a new generation of Lakota speakers," said Carlow, "I'm trying to do my little part to keep the language alive, we are planning a summer camp and we are developing materials - many times I've sat around with people who are so busy shooting each other's ideas down, when are we going to stop talking about it and do something?"

The Tusweca Tiospaye organization has a mission of creating a strong, healthy and prosperous environment where Lakota children and their families can learn and incorporate the Lakota language in their daily lives with a vision that one day children of Pine Ridge Reservation will feel safe and comfortable in using the Lakota language as their primary language at home and in the community.

"The Lakota language is the foundation of Lakota identity and culture and through the language, Lakota children can reclaim their identity which will empower them to live to their full potential as

Veterans Day celebration honors veterans and tribal presidents

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

WANBLEE - According to former Oglala Sioux council representative, Ruth Brown, eight people from the community have died in the last three months, however, Brown, Elroy and Deb Cross and her cousin Linda Marshall of Rosebud decided that they wanted to hold the 4th annual Veterans Day celebration as scheduled in the Eagle Nest District on the eastern edge of the Pine Ridge.

The colors were posted by American Legion Post 269 and the Eagle Nest singers provided the beautiful traditional songs for the entire event which ended with a roast beef dinner, pie, wojapi, and soup. The VA Black Hills Intertribal color guard from Hot Springs was also in attendance as was Legion Post 240 of Martin.

Held at Crazy Horse School, the event attracted hundreds of visitors to the quiet community that some say was once a part of the Rosebud Sioux reservation. It apparently began with a veterans program held outside at the memorial wall in the morning. Brown said that the wall which names both Lakota and white veterans needs to eventually be redone. The afternoon event was emceed by veteran, Johnny Wilson, a 20 year Navy veteran and featured the Gold Star Mothers who sat prominently and patiently throughout the afternoon. They are Mary Moran, Delores Standing Soldier, Marie Randall and Yvonne Bald Eagle.

Marie Randall, a elder and gifted Lakota speaker spoke on behalf of the Gold Star Mothers and explained how such families in the Wanblee have always honored their military veterans. She said, "I want to thank all of the mothers…the veterans are here to celebrate their fallen comrades. Thank you for all you did for the Eagle Nest community."

The fact that many from the community have always faithfully protected their families and served their country was borne out by most of the speakers. Linda Marshall, an assistant to Rosebud Sioux tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, spoke on his behalf as she noted, "I like to remember that Native Americans have the highest percentage of those who served in the military. Thank you for the sacrifice you made."

Several youngsters wrote poems for the event and also decorated the gym. Opi Chipps read "A Tribute to Veterans" while Gerard Baker, Mandan-Hidatsa, Superintendent of the Rushmore National Park took to the stage and delivered an inspirational message about such gatherings. He said, "We have always had warrior societies that fought for their families. We are honoring those who fought for us. I have been with the Park Service for 30 years. I propose we challenge our young to be warriors of tomorrow. Our enemies take many forms."

Another poem on the agenda included, "A National Strength" by Marsha Janis, while the juniors and seniors from Tasunke Witko owayawa were Local veterans were seen moving about and assisted where needed, including Lavon White, Kim Conroy, Abel. Alvin No Horse was introduced to the crowd and was given an ovation with his newly awarded Medal of Valor. Sicangu Lakota Vietnam veterans, Robert "Boney" Moran of White River.

Veteran, Bryant High Horse originally from Rosebud and who now teaches at North Middle school in Rapid City explained that the Lakota people were always spiritual and that such honorings followed a certain protocol where Lakota was freely used.

The afternoon's agenda included OST president, John Yellow Bird Steele, who noted that his travels take him to many honorings for veterans. He said, "I want to thank Elroy Cross and Ruth Brown. We lost a lot of our own active veterans here in Wanbli. The Oglalas are the only warriors to have always fought for freedom. We're still fighting for freedom…It is psychological damage. You have to remember being from a warrior society, I think our ancestors knew of this psychological damage. That's why the Oglalas honored their warriors. It's healing to the mind to accept the warriors."

Lieutenant Colonel, Delane F. Boyer-Quiver was the distinguished speaker. An enrolled Oglala Lakota originally from Wanbli, LTC Boyer was the recipient of the Legion of Merit, 2 Army Commendation Medals, a Combat Infantry Badge, several unit citations and wore the green beret. His biography was lengthy and detailed his military assignments, which included two tours of duty in Vietnam. Boyer also earned a doctor of education degree.

Special guest and Lakota code talker, Clarence Wolf Guts was on the agenda, but was unable to attend. The speakers were presented with star quilts, while Carol Herrera was scheduled to present the traditional foods of choke cherry juice and wasna.

Boyer apparently grew up in Wanbli and knew many older veterans who have since passed on, but who have become household names in the community. He asked all Lakota veterans to stand and be acknowledged as well as the non-Lakota veterans. He said, "You have a bond; a band of brothers and sisters. Only you know the feeling….I would like to thank hankasi Ruth Brown and tahansi Tom Poor Bear and the school principal. I pay my respects to the distinguished visitors."

Gerard Baker summed up the successful veteran's day honoring when he said, "This community did an excellent job and the kids heard a message today, each one is a warrior…I look at gatherings, we never stopped them. It takes our members to do that. It is an extension of traditional times. It is an honor to be here." Linda Marshall said, "We came here to celebrate on November 11. It almost died out and we said, 'let's revive it' and here we are today to honor our veterans.

The Gold Star mothers sat patiently all afternoon during the 4th annual Veterans honoring as they presided over the events held at Crazy Horse School. The Gold Star mothers are Mary Moran, Delores Standing Soldier, Marie Randall and Yvonne Bald Eagle.

beautiful, proud, confident and strong Lakota people," said Carlow, "people who are able to make better lives for themselves and a more prosperous future for the entire Lakota Nation."

Believing that the Lakota language is becoming alarmingly close to being lost, the organization is working to revitalize the Lakota language by creating new generations of Lakota speakers through programs that focus on the teaching and learning of the language and the promotion of its use. Programs include year round Lakota language classes for children and their families, development of new language teaching and learning materials, development of language awareness and promotional materials, having year-round Lakota style hand game classes with annual Lakota style hand game tournaments, creating an annual Lakota culture summer camp, provide traditional foods workshops and have a community traditional foods garden.,

"Earlier, I came across writings of Darrel Kipp on the Blackfeet," said Carlow, "he said you don't need permission, begin now or fall further behind; if you are serious and have one student, then start, you have to do it; he left the reservation and when he came back he knew only 15 words of his traditional language, today he dreams in that language, he started a school and the language is the biggest part of the curriculum - my goal is to open a school where the curriculum is driven by the language, teaching students but doing it in our language."

"Today, we have very few speakers left and even fewer who teach teachers how to teach the language," said Meya, "as I said earlier, we are lucky to get a three day workshop to work with teachers; currently we are developing a three week language institute for June on the Standing Rock, an institute that will be open to everyone, with college credit available and that will focus on the language, the teaching of the language, materials and the future."

Robert Two Crow heads up Lakota Studies and Technology for Shannon County Schools on Pine ridge and he agrees, we need to focus on the teachers, develop men and women who are very capable at teaching the language inside and outside the school, it is imperative, he added.

"We have to stop worrying about how people feel about the materials we are using," said Carlow, "we need to look at how the materials are working with the students, are they using the materials and do they work, not criticizing it because it is new or different or that two white guys are developing the materials - we want to construct and operate a Lakota language learning center on Pine Ridge Reservation."

Editor's NoteThis is the third in a series of stories about the Lakota language. Originally it was going to be one or two but the subject is important, complex, has a lot of interest and there will be more.

Judge Adams upholds suspension of some OST tribal council members

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ An Oglala Sioux tribal judge has upheld the suspensions of some tribal council members who reportedly refused to take a drug test.

``My ruling was really simple,'' Lisa Adams said late Friday after a day-long hearing.

It was not clear how many council members were suspended. Adams listed six and possibly a seventh, but council members put the number at four or five.

She said she thinks the tribal council can require drug tests of its members. ``The goal is to promote a drug-free council. And if you test positive, you probably should step down,'' Adams said.

Also in her ruling, Adams reversed the suspension of tribal treasurer Crystal Eagle Elk, saying the council had no authority to suspend her. Suspending Eagle Elk would have resulted in a ``crisis'' because the tribe then could not pay employees or provide vital assistance, the judge said.

She also voided parts of a council resolution that would have required publication of the hair-follicle drug test results in newspapers and would have required council members who failed the tests to resign or be impeached.

Adams said drug-test results should be private because they could expose council members to criminal prosecution.

Tribal council member Floyd Brings Plenty of Oglala, who introduced the original resolution last month, said it was a response to federal charges in New Mexico against council member Don Garnier, who has been suspended pending the outcome of the case against him.

Brings Plenty said the resolution shows the council's commitment to a drug-free reservation. He also said John Steele, the tribal president, ignored the council's original resolution.

William ``Shorty'' Brewer, tribal vice president, was the one who enforced the council mandate requiring all tribal council and executive committee members to submit to a hair follicle drug test on Wednesday.

Adams said she expects her ruling will be appealed to the tribe's supreme court.

Former Rosebud Casino management firm wants new trial

ROSEBUD - BBC Entertainment, the firm that formerly managed the Rosebud Casino filed a petition for a new trial on Nov. 2 for several reasons. Charles Colombe, sole owner of the firm noted in a press release that the ruling by Judge B. J. Jones in favor of the Rosebud Sioux tribe was politically motivated.

Tribal attorneys claimed that BBC overpaid itself by $399,353.61 when the firm's contract was about to expire. Under the 1994 contract BBC Entertainment was to receive 35 percent of the net proceeds.

When RST filed suit in 2001 to contest the amount a tribal judge ruled in favor of BBC and the tribe appealed to the tribal Supreme Court. A new trial was held in August and Judge Jones issued his ruling which was released to the media the day before tribal elections at 4:51 p.m. according to Colombe. Colombe said that the timing of the ruling affected the outcome of the tribal presidential candidacy of Louis "Wayne" Boyd who was a former partner of BBC.

Charlie Colombe

Boyd subsequently lost his bid and was successfully voted into the position of RST tribal treasurer by a role call vote of the tribal council shortly after their swearing in ceremony.

In his press release Colombe wrote, "Judge Jones totally disregarded five years of casino audits completed by the Rosebud Sioux Tribal auditors that resolve, "BBC was not over paid and in fact never received the thirty-five percent net profits due them under the National Indian Gaming Commission (NIGC) approval contract."

Colombe pointed out further that tribal officials had chosen the auditors and who based their findings on BBC's monthly financial reports.

He said that the auditors used a cash accounting system instead of a cash accrual system. Colombe said that BBC never received the 35 percent due them under the NIGC contract.

Finally, his press release noted that, "I believe that the ruling for the RST/BBC lawsuit is a political decision, nothing more. I also believe that the credibility of our tribal court has been severely eroded."

Mills family swims Alcatraz with focus on health

SAN FRANCISCO -The water is cold, the shark legends scary and the currents formidable, but Nakina Mills didn't let that stop her.

In September, Nakina joined her father, brother and two other Lakota swimmers in a 1.2-mile swim from Alcatraz Island to the San Francisco shore.

"I think it's 80 percent mental and 20 percent physical," said Nakina, who at 27 has swum Alcatraz twice as part of a program called Pathstar.

Created by retired pediatrician Nancy Iverson, Pathstar focuses on restoring the health of Lakota people on Pine Ridge Reservation. Pathstar's Alcatraz project includes a week of programs about healthful eating and exercise, and daily swims in the San Francisco Bay. The week finishes with the Alcatraz swim.

In 1993, Iverson was working as a pediatrician in San Francisco when she began offering her services, in short stints, at Indian Health Service at Pine Ridge.

Iverson, a South Dakota native, unofficially started Pathstar that year as a way to help promote health among the Lakota population. "One of my focuses has always been health and wellness ... disease prevention, healthy diet, healthy lifestyle," she said.

During that same period, Iverson began swimming in San Francisco Bay while at home in California. The cold water of the bay, with temperatures ranging from 46 to 63 degrees, helped to relieve pain from a degenerative back condition.

In 2003, Iverson organized and hosted the first Pathstar Alcatraz program, which attracted only two Lakota people from Pine Ridge. Initially, Iverson thought the pair would do the Alcatraz swim as a relay but changed plans when both decided to swim the entire way.

The swim stretches about 1-1/4 miles, but because of the currents, most swimmers swim closer to two miles. Swims usually last from 1-1/2 hours to 1-3/4.

Each year, Iverson has worked to bring in more Lakota participants from Pine Ridge to participate in Pathstar. In 2004, Terry Mills decided to be one of those participants.

"It was last minute. I had a few days' notice, and I loaded up my car and drove to San Francisco," Terry said.

At the time, Terry worked as a coordinator for a youth program at Pine Ridge. Today, he serves as the director of economic development.

The health focus of the program initially piqued Terry's interest, but he admits that the Alcatraz swim was the big draw. "I'm excited about challenges in life. Good clean challenges," he said.

Terry has completed the Pathstar Alcatraz swim for three years. The thrill has never dulled. "The actual day of the swim and doing the swim is the highest level of excitement," he said.

After his first Alcatraz swim, Terry persuaded his daughter Nakina to join him. Nakina has since participated for the past two years. This year, his son Kenny also attended the program, swimming Alcatraz for the first time.

Both Nakina and her father see the biggest challenge of the week as the cold water. For people who don't swim a great deal and rarely in frigid water, the first days of acclimation swimming can be intense.

"The first year, it was a shocker," Nakina said. "We're used to cold ... but not being in it. It's making it past that first jump in."

"That is the toughest part ... the cold," Terry said. "Every day that you get into the water, your mind has to be set to accept the temperature change."

During the swim, swimmers are paired with an experienced swimming partner who swims beside them. Each swimmer also is accompanied by a canoe or kayak. A guide boat keeps watch for larger watercrafts.

Nakina admits that one of the biggest challenges for her was getting over the fear of what's swimming beneath her. "Last year, it was all about hurry up and get across and get out," she said. "This year, I made it more of a team thing. I was looking around, looking at Alcatraz."

Terry said people ask about the sharks and other animals in the water, but he has reassuring words for them. "I tell people ... don't fear those animals, just respect them."

This year, all five participants finished the swim in 45 minutes. In addition to the Mills family, Adam Bad Wound, who is originally from South Dakota and is now a student at Stanford University, participated, as did James O'Daniel of Rapid City.

Iverson said that while the swim is only one part of the program, it tends to inspire participants in all aspects of their lives.

"After the first year, just knowing I could do something like that - it gave me a lot of confidence," Nakina said. It also made eating healthy seem like a pretty simple matter

"It gets me to thinking of other ways to try to eat healthy," she said.

Terry found the same thing. "It was so rewarding. It built my confidence," he said. He runs, walks and lifts some light weights, but the program has helped keep healthful eating in the front of his mind.

"I have changed my diet ... it has changed drastically. I watch my cholesterol level. I eat more healthy food instead of fried foods," he said.

Iverson hopes that others like the Mills family will see the opportunity that Pathstar offers and attend a future program. She's already looking ahead to next year's swim.

"It's a huge deal to do an Alcatraz swim," she said. "I think it's important to have opportunities to shine and ... personally accomplish something. It's really a major, major experience."

To find out more about the Pathstar organization and about next year's Alcatraz swim, go to www.pathstar.org or call (415) 648-3707.

Thoughts that come from the heart

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

Giago paved the way for Indian media

Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Lakota Country Times Editor/Publisher

This past weekend, Tim Giago was inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame. I wasn't able to attend because of personal reasons but was so proud that the South Dakota Newspaper Association chose Tim as one of their four inductees for the year. Over time, there has been 100 people recognized in the Hall of Fame from South Dakota and Giago is the first Native American to be selected for the honor. For South Dakota, that is an honor.

Giago has paved the way for Indian media way back when ignorance and racism was thicker than what it is today. He started the Lakota Times back in 1981 and it was renamed to Indian Country Today in the early 1990s and then eventually the Oneida Nation of New York purchased it and took it to a wider national scale. The ink is still not dry in his blood: he published the Lakota Journal until 2004 when he retired and sold it to the Flandreau Sioux Tribe on the east side of the state

In 1982, I was struggling to attend Oglala Lakota College full time, raise two children with my husband and fit a job in there somewhere, I worked part time for Tim and Doris Giago. I worked at their newspaper in Martin in post production, getting the newspaper ready for distribution. Soon, I made it to typist, mailing, then design and after a couple of years Tim tacked on Editor to the back of my name.

He gave me books to study and taught me how to handle that red pen fairly well. He was patient with me, he taught me about editing and writing and what he couldn't teach me he sent me to places where I could learn. One day he placed the Associated Press Manual on my desk and said that was like the Bible language to professional journalism. The contents of that book were used by mainstream newspapers. It basically makes reading news easy.

It took time but I learned it.

One of those first places was Columbia University in New York with funding from the New York Times. I attended a seminar for news editors for a week and in my spare time, did a tour around New York City.

It was a learning experience for me and what I retained was the knowledge that technology was changing the world and what the news media had to look forward to regarding technology.

Knowing those things helped to shape the foundation of my career. It was also a trip that tempted me to do more traveling through my career to see the 'culture' of mainstream America.

Not only is Tim a gifted writer and committed publisher but he was an independent business man.

He published his papers on his own, which meant owning his own press because he wanted to see freedom of the Indian press.

He didn't fold or give in to pressure when it went against his beliefs. I saw him time after time stand up for his beliefs about the news media, about racism, about freedom of religion, about tribal government, state and local issues.

I especially enjoyed his symbolic way of rolling up his newspaper and thumping the non-Indian press on the forehead with it to bring attention to their ignorant behavior towards Native Americans, especially to members of the South Dakota Newspaper Association, who inducted him to the Hall of Fame.

He believed they had the tools to educate South Dakota about the Lakota people and their respective nations. That is why I am so pleased he is now in their Hall of Fame.

In the 14 years, I worked for Tim, I could write story after story of what went in an Indian newspaper news room but what sticks with me most is a phrase he used to fire at me, which I finally learned in my heart, "A good editor can make a mediocre writer good and a good writer great."

It was knowing we had the skills and the means of making great Indian writers that developed the ink in my blood. I watched him work with many writers, columnists, graphic artists, cartoonists, sales people and others and knowing that they have moved forward in their lives with the knowledge that they learned and used it somewhere in their lives to make change.

Since then I have worked with writers, columnists, graphic artists, cartoonists, high school students and others and I hope that even the tiniest thing they learn from me will benefit them and their community just as I learned from him.

Tim wanted to see change in Indian country so he used his papers to promote change. Because of his beliefs and his methods there were times he wasn't very popular in Indian communities but he is a true pioneer for Indian journalism. He did it his way.

When the Lakota Journal was sold to Flandreau in 2004, I jumped on the bandwagon to start Lakota Country Times in 2004 for Pine Ridge and Rosebud to fill that void.

Information is important because information can make change and that is why I made the choice to take the newspaper helm again.

Every time I log onto Indian Country Today to see what is happening on the national front, I feel pride in how it has grown and I remember those late nights of putting the 'paper to bed' and remember when it was all about making change.

It was about one man's desire to profile the plights and joys of Indian county.

Every week, when we put the Lakota Country Times 'to bed' I am proud we are providing information that will make someone curious, provide information that makes people think about issues, to make someone smile and feel proud of achievement, to feel inspired or just plain laugh at our cartoons.

Respect to the spirit of life needs to be brought back

By Chief Arvol Looking Horse
19th Generation Keeper of the Sacred White Buffalo Calf Pipe

Mitakuye Oyasin (all my relations),

Another great message has come to us from the animal nation. This time, it is more urgent then ever! It has come to my attention of another birth of a white buffalo, this time it is more different then any other sign.

So far since 1994, the same time that Global Warming was being announced; there have been at least 4-6 every year of these sacred buffalo calves that have stood upon the earth. Not only the buffalo have showed these signs to tell us of this great urgency that is upon us, but in many parts of the world, there have been other animal nations showing this sacred color.

This color represents the south, the direction in which we pass through to the spirit world, a completed cycle. This interpretation has to do with the Bundle I take care of; that carries a prophesy from the White Buffalo Calf Woman. She told of a time when her spirit would stand upon the earth, a time of great changes were about to come to us all.

A time when the two legged would have to make a decision to change their ways to heal the damage that they have created. Boundaries in respecting life and spirit will have become violated.

This birth is yet another sign, but brings more awareness of this urgency. This new birth has to do with 2 female buffalo kept in captivity, with no male buffalo present.

It would be hard to believe, but in this instance, the place they live has kept this quiet, because they did not want to be accused of artificially inseminating the female buffalo. There have been these types of instances that have been done in the past, concerning publicity in owning a white buffalo calf.

The Woodland Zoo in Farmington, Pennsylvania decided to bring in two female buffalo to their facility. One of the females was pregnant when she arrived. After she had the calf, it was sold, 6 months later, she gave birth to another calf, this time it was white. Buffalo carry for 9 months as humans do. The other female she lived with, gave birth 9 months later to a black buffalo after the white calf stood upon the earth, again no male buffalo present.

This was brought to my attention a while back. I did not want to state anything till I took this through ceremony, to understand the truth and the message.

Since 1994, these kinds of signs have been coming, but it seems that people do not listen or want to see anything important from the animal nation's messages. This has a lot to do with faith.

What was told is as follows: This is a very dangerous time we are in! The minds of the people on Unc'i Maka (Grandmother Earth) are choosing to focus on a new way of life that is hurting us all in the global community. This way of life chooses war, hurting one another physically and verbally, and continued desecration to Unc'i Maka in taking more then what we truly need in her resources.

These decisions not only hurt our own People, but the animal nations are dying in large numbers to extinction by this new way of life we are accepting. Unc'i Maka is going to have a hard time to continue to bring food to all life.

These decisions need to be changed very soon and are in each and every one of your hands more then ever.

Respect to the spirit of life needs to be brought back; boundaries need to put back into place and faith needs to be present in everyone's life once again.

We have no choice but to listen!

Warriors among us, the Lakota woman veteran

Dear Editor:

You probably haven't heard much about this group of female warriors but they are right here, possibly sitting next to you at the local Veteran's Day ceremonies. Ever thought of Sacagawea as a U.S. Army Veteran?

Recruited by the U.S. Army as a Shoshone scout for an expedition in the Western Plains territory, some would say she certainly qualifies. In 2002, journalist Maya Dollarhide, wrote "Native American women have been supporting the United States in wartime since the American Revolution. Little has been documented about them, historians say, and thousands of their stories have been lost or forgotten."

Retired Lt. Colonel Brenda Finnicum, Lumbee Nation, and the Women In Military Service for American Foundation want to change that. Native American women have served in World War I through Desert Storm and today.

According to the Foundation, one of the oldest documented cases of Native American women serving the United States military is that of four Lakota nuns who worked as nurses in Cuba during the Spanish Civil War. Eight years after the 1890 Wounded Knee Massacre, The Daughters of the American Revolution Hospital Corps had four Congregation of American Sisters of Fort Pierre (Fort Berthold), tending to the sick and wounded soldiers of Camp Cuba Libre (Jacksonville, Fla.) and Camp Onward (Savannah, Ga.). Susan Bordeaux (Reverend Mother M. Anthony), Ella Clark (Reverend Sister M. Gertrude), Anna B. Pleets (Reverend Mother M. Bridget), and Josephine Two Bears (Reverend Sister M. Joseph) lived in tents and earned $30 a month for their service. The nurses were soon transferred to Havana, Cuba. While there, Sister Anthony died of disease and was buried with military honors. Mildred Rexroat joined the Women's Air force Service Pilots directly out of high School. After World War II "Rexy" then served almost ten years in the Air Force. Darlene Yellow Cloud was inspired to join the Army because the men in her family had served since World War I.

Iva Good Voice Flute discovered that she came from a family of four women military veterans after enlisting in the Air Force in 1991.

Iva chartered the first all women American Legion Post on the Pine Ridge and served as the first female Native commander. In 2002, the Foundation with the help of Lt. Colonel Finnicum developed a memorial exhibit in Washington, D.C. featuring Native American women who served in the U.S. armed forces. Native American women veterans are urged by historians and activists alike to register with the 'Women In Military Service for American Foundation http://www.womensmemorial.org) to bring their stories to the public through its Oral History Archives.

Lakota women, let your voice be heard. For this generation and the next.

Man who dropped Atomic bomb on Japan dead, leaving behind distorted history

Wanblii Ake Glii

Recently, I watched a Fox News Report announcing that the man who piloted the plane which dropped the atomic bomb on Hiroshima, Japan, back in August, 1945, died at the age of 91. What caught my attention was the brief explanation the news reporter gave why America dropped that bomb in the first place. He said, "so America could avoid a bloody ground war with the Japanese." I wasn't surprised at his response because that is the same old lie the American government told the people back in that era, and apparently the same old lie is still being told today.

I thought about the millions of people who have already lived and died since then and never knew or had a clue as to what really happened behind the bombing of Japan.

I thought about the millions of people now who still don't know and the many that never will and I felt disheartened so I thought I'd do what I could to set the record straight.

The spokesperson who gave this false history report was just another person recounting what has always been told for truth.

The truth is that the U.S.'s justification for this action claimed that it would end the war quickly, and it would be unnecessary to invade Japan, because such an invasion, the government said, "would cost a million lives." Nonsense, this was only said to justify the bombings and convince the people it was the only thing to do.

When in reality the Japanese had been talking about surrender a year before this and had been trying to surrender three months before A-bombs were to be dropped on the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, but America didn't want surrender. And when Hiroshima was hit some 100,000 civilians were killed, three days later when Nagasaki was hit it left another 50,000 dead, all for a grand total of about 150,000 innocent civilians, men, women, and children of all ages slaughtered.

America would've dropped the A-bomb on the Nazi's, but by then it was too late because they had surrendered so Japan would do. It wasn't about winning the war for America at that time because they had already won it. They were actually in a race with Russia to see who could drop the first nuclear weapon, and as we all know now, America won the contest.

If one questions or is to make sense of all this A-bomb history, one has to look back even further to the beginning of these nuclear weapons, and ask the question, "What was needed to make a nuclear weapon and where was it found and taken? Well, uranium is needed and the uranium "taken" for these bombs in particular was on and around the Navajo reservation in the early 40's.

The U.S. called this plan to develop nuclear weapons The Manhattan Project, where all uranium mined for weapons production was taken to an area next to Navajo on another reservation, the San Ildefonso Pueblo Indians, where a big portion of land was taken from them and on it was built a huge facility called the Los Alamos National Scientific Laboratory, where the first three atomic bombs were made and called "Trinity."

So originally there were three bombs, and in case you are wondering what happened to the third one, it was tested three weeks before the bombing of Japan next to the Mescalero Apache reservation in New Mexico, making them the earliest known victims to experience nuclear warfare.

History just like this involving uranium mining, nuclear weapons production, and testing goes even deeper and gets more corrupted than you can imagine unless you know.

It is repeated over and over involving Indigenous peoples throughout America and it gets even darker on islands outside of the U.S. where more bombs were later tested after the ending of the World Wars on other Indigenous peoples and their lands.

Of course like the lies told about the Trinity bombs these were covered up as well, as best could be, the truth hidden or distorted, as always.

The pain of losing a child never ends

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Parents aren't supposed to outlive their children. But it happens sometimes.

Her name was Roberta, but I always called her "Birdie." When she was just about two I bought her a tiny, toy pony. She loved that little horse and she carried it with her wherever she went. When I first handed her the pony I said, "Now here is a little toy for you." From then on she called the pony "Toy."

One Sunday evening we were visiting her grandma who lived in the South Valley of Albuquerque in a place where there was still plenty of open pastures. I was carrying Birdie down a little dirt road by grandma's house when a black horse came galloping along the fence by the road. Birdie looked at the toy pony in her hand and then she looked at the real live horse and she pointed at the horse and said, "Toy."

She grew into a beautiful young lady. Her mother and I had separated and I had moved back to my home in South Dakota.

She wanted to come up and stay with me and work at my newspaper. I was only too happy to have her with me.

Whenever I would introduce her to my employees and friends they would inevitably say, "What a beautiful girl."

Roberta worked really hard at the newspaper, but she missed her mother and after several months she decided to return to Albuquerque. I know that she had been in some trouble down there with an ex-husband who ended up in prison.

I was reluctant to let her go back because I didn't want her to get back into the same situation she had just left.

I tried to get down to Albuquerque to visit her as often as possible and I ended up opening a branch of my newspaper down there and Roberta came to work for me once more.

In early 2006 I went to visit her and my grandchildren. I helped her find a house to live in and then we had a lot of fun getting the furniture for it.

By this time Roberta had four daughters and they were all happy and unique young girls. Before I returned to Rapid City I took Roberta and the kids to the local mall in Los Lunas.

While the kids were shopping, Roberta and I walked out to the car to wait for them. We sat down on a bench in the shade of a mall building. Roberta told me that she was glad that her life was finally on track. She had enrolled at an extension of the University of New Mexico and was studying journalism. Her children were all doing well in school.

She put her head on my shoulder and said, "Dad, I just want to make you happy and I want you to be proud of me." I told her that no matter what, I was always proud of her.

I left for South Dakota early the next morning and that was the last time I saw my Birdie. On April 6, 2006, she was racing home in the middle of the afternoon with my granddaughter Crystal seated next to her in their old pickup when she missed a curve. She threw herself across the seat to shield her daughter and she was killed. Crystal held her in her arms as she died. She had just turned 34.

Roberta always said that if anything ever happened to her she wanted to be cremated. So that is what we did. There was a beautiful place north of the Jemez Indian Pueblo up in the mountains that she loved. She used to take the girls there on picnics and she would relax and listen to the radio while they climbed and played in the boulders near the road. She had discovered an old cottonwood tree and it became her shade tree.

Her mom, her children, her brother Timmy, and I put her favorite song in the CD player of my pickup truck, Free Bird by Lynyrd Skynrd, turned the volume on high, and we buried her ashes beneath that beautiful tree as the sound of that song reverberated off of the mountains.

My granddaughter Crystal, who had just turned 15, was the only one to speak.

With tears running down her face she said, "My mom saved my life for a reason and I won't let her down."

As my son and grandchildren climbed the rocks above her resting place, I sat beneath that cottonwood tree next to her ashes and looked at the deep blue skies and the clouds that floated gently like cotton candy, and in the sky I saw that little girl I had held in my arms on that Sunday evening so many years ago, and I heard her voice as she pointed at that real live horse and said, "Toy."

Finding My Voice

By Dana Lonehill

Writing for the Fun Factory in the Rapid City Journal

Dana Badmilk

I am doing okay on the food challenge so far, except that for some reason my daughter decided she likes ALL of the cheap stuff I bought, like pretzels. So I am having to hoard them.

But I didn't want to talk about that until it is over.

So here is what I am going to talk about.

When I was a 7-years old, I lived out by Denby Dam, in an old farmhouse.

In this old farmouse there were hundreds of first editions of beautiful books by Louisa May Alcott, John Steinbeck, Laura Ingalls Wilder, and many others. I filled my days and nights finding a queit spot to read and eat wild plums.

One day a trailer was moved in, so that even out in the middle of nowhere we all of a sudden had neighbors. The new neighbors were a young couple with a baby and a yellow German Sheperd named Taco. I loved that dog.

One day my stepdad told me who our neighbors were. He showed me the newspaper they had worked at.

I remembered seeing Tim taking pictures around the place and being proud when even our old chicken coop appeared on the front page of The Lakota Times.

I was encouraged by my stepdad to write, and inspired by Tim. I used to send my short stories and poetry into

The Fun Factory in the Rapid City Journal and would be so proud to see my name in print.

A few years and another stepdad later, we bought the trailer from Tim, as he had moved it into Pine Ridge,by then When we bought the trailer we sort of inherited Taco, who didn't pass away until I was 22.

In my 20's I moved along with my family to Rapid City along with my very miserable cat. When she became pregnant, we kind of paid Tim back for Taco and gave him one of the kittens for his daughter. Tim recently informed me that the cat is still alive and well living in Brookings.

So our paths have crossed a few times in life, usually via pets.

But I have always looked up to him and admired what he has done for Natives in the world of journalism. He has opened many doors and started a pathway for the rest of us to follow. I admit, when I need his shoulder, I cry around to Tim.

To which he gave me some great advice that I have hanging in my room.

"A turtle cannot move forward unless it learns to stick it's neck out."

So to Tim Giago, I would like to thank him for doing all he has done for journalism in Indian Country, for that yellow dog Taco that I grew up with, and congratulations on your induction in the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame.

Dana Badmilk is a 35 year old self employed artist who recently moved back to the Pine Ridge Reservation. She lives there with her husband and four children. She can be read at her blog http://danasvoice. blogspot.com.

Powwow protocol must be made with accuracy and honesty

Dear Editor,

Powwow! These modern-day large gatherings of native people are fantastic events. For those who have never attended one, the grand entry is an incredible sight. Hundreds of native dancers from a wide range of nations usually take part, especially if there is a large amount of money involved. Unfortunately, a dancer will not dance or a singer will not sing without it.

On the other hand, I grew up on the homeland, an environment where people still speak Lakota and live according to ancient cultural protocols. This is why I have to point to how far we have strayed from the old ways at these particular events. First, let me try to set the stage for the majority. Primarily, we have to know who we are and where we come from.

Some say the old ways are meaningless and extinct; that we must move forward in the new world. These old ways are not so outdated when one lives them. My contention is that the old ways are our lifeline in these changing modern times. A person who is unaware of these things weakens the nation.

Therefore, we have to take into account several vital elements comprising our culture. If we expect our children and grandchildren to maintain our language and culture, we have to teach them these prerequisites. If we look forward to remaining a distinct group of people in the future, we must transmit all of these elements as a single unit to our youth; we cannot separate them.

I see a serious situation and that is the primary reason for this article. Are we in deep denial of the fact that we are losing our ways? Personally, I feel many of us are. We cannot procrastinate any longer. This means today, not tomorrow. Also, there is effort involved for both teachers and learners.

Perhaps we are hoping that some marvelous and magical phenomenon will restore us to our former distinctive status as Lakota people. Can we ever be of one belief, one language, one history, again? It is difficult to imagine; however, it is not impossible. With some proactive effort, it is achievable.

We must analyze and enhance our efforts to transmit vital cultural elements to our youth, such as: wicowoglake (language); wowahokunkiye (imparting cultural knowledge); wowakan (spiritual rites and teachings); otakuye or wicowe (generational protocol); and the most important is otokaheya woyakapi (origin chronicles).

Arguably, there are more; I agree and add, "Let's stop trying to outdo each other and start teaching our youth". Too many times, I have witnessed people using this information for their own advancement or performing cultural traditions at large commercial type powwows to impress non-Indians, or the paying customer.

This situation effectively transmits altered cultural data to our youth. The real losers here are our children and grandchildren. We have older people now who have retained and actually live according to the old way.

I suggest using them collectively to mold our youth into Lakota people again. In other words, don't rely on one source.

I attended the Black Hills Expo celebration (Oct. 5, 6, & 7, 2007) at the Civic Center in Rapid City. I do not deny that it was an impressive event. I sat there at our drum and tried to imagine what it was like to be in the shoes of a non-Indian attending the event for the very first time. I think those people got their money's worth.

Anyway, I am not completely partial to these big events simply because they are immensely diverse. In addition, the things I see at these gatherings regarding our culture often trouble me. Actually, the waywardness of some of these things - a slow destruction of my revered ancient way - is distressing and oftentimes downright embarrassing.

I am not blaming or accusing any one individual of anything. I know all the people involved with the Black Hills Expo are good people. Actually, most of us are reluctant products of the federal government's brutal assimilation policies of the 1800s. The new government wanted us to forget our old ways and, sad to say, it nearly succeeded.

Actually, I commend all the people who worked hard to make the Expo possible; they did their best to maintain our old ways; however, some things do fall through the cracks, so to speak. I believe it is up to all of us, as Lakota people, to stand up and teach not only our youth, but also those relatives who are into the new, modern way of thinking and living.

For instance, I heard a young participant state to his cohorts that modern powwows are true images of the best of the Indian world; "pure evolution", he said. The young "Indian" man shaved his head, wore oversized trousers, bandana tied on the head, ball cap worn sideways, and spoke with an air of arrogance and authority.

I understand evolution is a change for the better. Can we truly call these modern powwows evolutionary? Not when we disregard our ancient proven ways and cast them aside. When we create new customs with wrong or enhanced information, we are disrespecting our ancestor's culture, language, and history, just to impress non-Indians or to enhance our own status.

Here are some examples of what I witnessed during the Black Hills Expo powwow. Please be informed that I have seen the same things at the few large powwows I attended across the land. The reason I am adding this little "disclaimer" is that too often people jump to conclusions without looking at the situation first, another deviation from our culture.

Let us begin. A memorial song is much like a ballad, a narrative poem. Such songs are composed to honor and venerate the memory of a deceased person. The words are in Lakota, therefore, the words have to be sung to transmit the meaning; otherwise, it is merely another melody. I heard at least one memorial song minus the words.

Another grossly misconstrued song follows: "Kola maopelo, kola maopelo, Iyasica ki kola maopelo. Wapaha wan sina wayin na tehiya waglihunni yelo". (translation: My friend, I have been shot. The enemy shot me. I have come home in a bad way, with a flag for a blanket). Somewhere, somehow, this particular memorial song became a "wounded veteran's song".

The late Richard "Dickie" Elk Boy composed this song to pay homage to the soldier's killed in action (KIA) on the battlefields of World War II.

Those young men came home to their grieving Lakota parents and families in American flag-draped caskets. I was saddened to hear this song being transmitted to our youth as a "wounded veteran's song".

At least one-half or more of our total population are young and somewhat gullible because they are not aware of the history and culture of Lakota people nor are they knowledgeable of powwow protocol. This fact makes them susceptible to accepting new and oftentimes skewed cultural information.

Another instance is the rendition of a song that falls under what is commonly called a modern-day "snagging song". It is sung inappropriately for the men's traditional dance: "Dearie, oiyokipi na ohan iha yau canna, iyokipi mayayin na wacinyanka wacin yelo" (translation: Dearie, when you come smiling during a powwow, you make me happy and I want to see you).

Our youth appear disrespectful by wearing their headgear during honoring songs, the singing of the flag song, and the grand entry. The truth is they are simply unaware because of the serious cultural deviation. Even some of the older ones seemed lethargic. These people must know that younger generations are looking to them for guidance.

In addition, one of the women competitors dropped a plume and a group of male veterans retrieved it. I have heard that the proper protocol is for female veterans or older women to retrieve such plumes. Likewise, male veterans or older men retrieve feathers. The reason for this is simple; women give plumes and men give feathers.

I do not know much about Host and Honor drums. One thing though, when a drum group is hosting, it means the group is knowledgeable of powwow history, culture, and protocol, including appropriate songs. Such a drum is to facilitate the proper performance of all cultural activities for the function or event. I could be wrong though.

I have seen Host Drum members become immensely angry because they did not get to sing all the songs for the specials in a powwow. Host Drums must realize that some families (doing the special) prefer selecting a certain drum to do the honor. I don't really know what to think about this Host Drum idea.

I am not the expert on contemporary powwow protocol; I am only responding from what I saw and learned throughout the 23 years that I have been a member of a drum - Oyate Teca (Young People).

Complacency with mascots is genocide of the mind

Dear Editor:

Granted you could still be an indigenous world-view practitioner and support the use of Indians as mascots; then it would not be genocide. It would simply mean you are being tricked. It kills me whenever I hear Natives claiming they are "full-blood(ed)" and support the use of Indian mascots.

It does not matter if you are .001 percent "blooded"; the heart of the problem is a fundamental flaw in the actual practice of using Indian Mascots. We don't want change simply because we disagree semantically with the word "Sioux"; we prefer Ikce Oyate or Lakota/Dakota/Nakota. No, we want change because our very identity is under attack. Recently, there is another development in the mascot debate that hits close to home.

The University of North Dakota, which uses the nickname/moniker/mascot "Fighting Sioux," has agreed to retire the mascot if it cannot secure the approval of both Sioux Tribes of North Dakota within three years. UND has narrowed the field of tribes to persuade to the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe and the Spirit Lake Sioux Tribe - two of the 15 or so federally recognized Sioux Tribes in the Upper Midwest. Therefore, Standing Rock and Spirit Lake have an immense duty to the remaining tribal governments of the Oceti Sakowin (Great Sioux Nation). Most likely UND will again offer money, scholarships, or some combination of the two, to individual tribal members or the tribal governments.

I attended UND from 1997 to 2000. During that time I was honored to be involved with other individuals seeking to effect change from within the University. Since then, it seems we are still divided as a people about how to handle this issue.

Why do so many organizations such as UND choose to "honor" us by making us their mascot or using our name without our permission? A majority of organizations chose to use us as mascots at times when we were not empowered to impose our will, make our own decisions, or even influence decisions regarding this issue. We most likely would not have our namesake associated with games played for America's entertainment purposes. It is time for a change.

It has been time for a change since socially conscious people began seeking change at UND over 30 years ago.

This issue is not about Indians crying around because of the next degrading treatment or policy from the non-Indian. This is about our own existence, our own place on this earth in this day and age, our own spiritual health, and self esteem.

Since we lost control of our spiritual self-determination, due to the overwhelming forces of European/American influence, it has been extremely difficult for our children to learn that their sense of self worth comes from our living religion, our ways of life and knowing. The most devastating aspect of Indians as mascots is the objectification of our race.

A transformation happens, or happened, when a collective Euro-American consciousness began to dictate what made up the essence of a Native American. This transformation makes the existence of mascots possible. Conversely, the practice of using Indians as mascots is evidence of that transformation. This transformation is also called "Objectification".

Objectification goes back to the days of the pre-Columbus papal bulls, claiming non-Christians had no rights of their own, and post-contact dime novels and stories about the white experience in Indigenous country. Stories were widespread of "the savage red men just beyond the frontier." Just think of the white women held captive by the lusty Sioux… I guarantee they were not "captive" but remained with the Sioux of their own free will. Ok, this is not the time for jokes. But still, the very fact that a group of folks attempted to "define" a culture demonstrates that "Sioux" identity was under attack from a forceful objectification that would supplant all conceptions, even our own, of Native identity.

No longer are we living our identity; we are looking at it through a lens created by the European a lens in which Indians are inferior and Whites are superior. We are looking through a lens created and evidenced by the use of Indians as mascots. Inevitably, we judge our own "Nativeness" based on the whole of our life experiences and learning.

Largely, the whole of our learning consists of foreign perceptions and views on the world, including us, learned in schools, television, internet and other outlets. Creating a mascot, based on a race of people, makes it easier for Indians and non-Indians to perceive that object group of people (Indians) as something different than the group creating the mascot (Humans). This process is dehumanization. There is a subtle shift in thinking that takes place when we are used as mascots.

There was a change in the way of knowing ourselves that continues today. For example, today we may not grow our hair long because that's the way we know; we grow it to stake a claim, to make a statement. We also cut it so we don't have to put up with all inconvenience of "looking the part". Likewise, some of our own people were ashamed to speak our own language or pray in the manner of our ancestors. The Indian mascot dilemma is so dangerous because it is doing significant damage while a large portion of us are unaware of it.

Because the objectification of Indians is so widespread, accepted, and institutionalized, we unwittingly buy in to the idea that Indians as mascots is harmless; it's all fun and games; they're not disrespecting it; they're honoring us. In reality this objectification of our essence is undercutting our self esteem. It is damaging the way we see ourselves and the way the world sees us.

So, this is how Indians and non-Indians are desensitized to the offensive nature of Indians as mascots. We are now either fully bought in, (most of the time unknowingly), pressured from the whole set of paradigms and experiences that are "American" to buy in, or we don't have time to worry about matters such as this so… guess what? You are bought in to the idea that your very own identity and self worth is something foreign to you; that does not already inhere in you. You may feel it is something you have to question, something you have to justify, something that may bring ridicule to yourself if you are caught acting too Indian in front of others that do not respect or know what it means to be Indian.

We may feel these things because of the larger attack on our esteem, including the attempted eradication of our religious ways, family, social and governmental systems. We were the targets of outright genocide. The attacks on our people are still among us, including the use of Indians as mascots.

Well, the Indian as a mascot is nothing new. It is the same practice of usurping our resources. Only this time it's not our natural resources. It is our cultural/intellectual resources being taken from us -our identity.

This seems to have started with the forced indoctrination of Indigenous people into foreign faiths and educational upbringings. We have survived nothing but ridicule and disdain for our faiths, cultures, and identities. Our kids and people are still subjected to scorn for our identity when they see that our essence is being objectified.

So I say this to our people and our leaders: we are counting on you to do the right thing. We know you will do the right thing and maintain the stance you have taken in years past. Nobody knows if America will ever come along in realizing the seriousness of this problem. Yet, the only way we can make things better is to try for change with our own lives.

There is obviously no shortage of compelling and convincing information available that counsels in favor of dropping the use of Indian mascots.

I think people don't have the time to care or learn about something so seemingly abstract. People see this as something not affecting their day to day lives. But make no mistake, the problem is not abstract; this practice causes damage to our own individual and national self esteem.

By not allowing our essence to be misappropriated and outright disrespected by others, we are promoting proper spiritual, and thus mental, and emotional health for our Wicoicage or Future Generations.

We will not see this debate go away any time soon. It will remain so long as Natives with informed senses of identity are alive and kicking in the new millennium.

Respectfully,

Big Crow tops returning class, O'Bryan training hard, Casey set to redshirt

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

MAYVILLE/VERMILLION /BROOKINGS - Pine Ridge graduate, Laura Big Crow, returned to Mayville State University for her senior year this fall, she spent two years at Williston State college before coming to Mayville for her junior year last year.

"She works her tail off, she stays out of trouble, she's a great role model," said Mayville head coach, Dennis Hutter,"she doesn't always seem like a ball player but she surprises you, she just keeps coming back and she just keeps fighting, she's a gamer."

After opening the season this year with two wins, Mayville State picked up their first loss Tuesday on the road, a 74-61 defeat against Dana College; Big Crow had 31 points and 11 rebounds in the loss. She had 28 points and 13 rebounds in their season opening win over Brandon University while hitting 18 points in their second win of the season over University of Winnipeg. Big Crow is averaging 25.6 points a game for the young season.

Mayville is 2-1 now on the season and travel to the Adams State Classic for a game against Adams State on Friday and the University of Colorado-Colorado Springs on Saturday.

Marissa O'Bryan, a 2006 Red Cloud graduate, returns for her sophomore year at the University of South Dakota in Vermillion. In her first year at USD, Marissa ran the 60, 100, 200 and 4 X 400 relay during the indoor season and the 100, 200, 4 X 100, 4 X 200, 4 X 400 and the 200 in the medley relay. conference champs this year. The university has decided to move up to NCAA Division I and after one more year in the NCC, USD track teams will have the opportunity to be the first athletic teams from USD to compete at the Division I level.

This school year, Marissa will run the 400, both the 4 X 400 relay and the open 400 and in the indoor season some 500s to get prepared for the outdoor season.

"When my coach, Matt Rama, first encouraged me to run the 400 in addition to the 100 and 200 during my senior year in high school, I really wasn't comfortable with it and when I ended up being ranked in the top ten in Class A in the 400 I would go around hiding the newspaper from Matt, he didn't need that kind of encouragement," said O'Bryan, "but now after a year at USD, my college coach, Lucky Huber, will do his best to prepare me, I just have to be dedicated and put in the hard work and on top of that, I have some great role models on my team, some awesome runners."

Mackenzie Casey, a 2004 Red Cloud graduate, spent the summer in Brookings, working out and getting ready for his senior year at South Dakota State University, setting his sights on a starting position on the SDSU men's basketball team. Scott Nagy, Jacks head coach, proposed red-shirting this year and extending his scholarship into next year when the team will have no seniors and will be eligible for both the conference season ending tournament and the NCAA tournament.

"Obviously working out and practicing with the team all year but not playing in any games will be hard," said Casey, who has been described as the emotional leader of the team, "but this year will allow me to get that much stronger and better prepared to have a really solid senior year and I'll be on the bench for each game working to provide energy for the team throughout the season."

Casey played in all 29 games as a freshman, played against current NBA players Rajon Rondo of Kentucky and Dee Brown and James Augustine of Illinois on national television as a sophomore and started seven games as a junior last year. Majoring in education and coaching, Mackenzie helped with youth basketball camps in Brookings, Winnebago and Red Cloud this past summer.

McLaughlin's Brittni Walker is a 6'0 junior at Minot State University in North Dakota. Last year, Brittni averaged almost 23 minutes a game, averaging 11.1 points per game and grabbing 5.8 rebounds a game. This year, Walker is the team's leading rebounder with 8.9 a game and their second leading scorer with 13.1 points a game; the Lady Beavers are 4-3 on the year. Minot State hosts Rocky Mountain College on Saturday, travels to Brandon University on Monday and is at Montana tech on Friday.

Quana Higgins, a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, is finishing up her senior year at South Dakota Tech, majoring in civil engineering and playing on the women's volleyball team. She is the daughter of Randy Higgins and Marilyn Wounded Head.

Other student athletes returning to school this year include Valene Pretends Eagle, a 2006 Crazy Horse graduate and a sophomore on the United Tribes women's basketball team, Ray Graham, a 2004 graduate of McLaughlin and a 6'2" sophomore along with his 6'4" sophomore brother Lane Taken Alive Taken Alive on the University of Mary men's basketball team; after red-shirting his first year, Daelan High Wolf, a 2006 Cheyenne Eagle Butte graduate is back at Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence Kan. where he will be playing as a freshman; Terrance Little Thunder, a 6'11" center from Cherry Creek is a junior on the Haskell team along with freshman Cory Barker from Ft. Thompson.

John McDaniel/Todd County, returned for his senior year as a defensive lineman at Dakota Wesleyan, Dennis McDaniel/Todd County was a junior offensive lineman for DWU; Keva Mendoza/Cheyenne Eagle Butte played as a sophomore on the Haskell volleyball team; Rosebud Haukaas/Todd County played as a sophomore on the Dakota Wesleyan volleyball team.

Rapid City Central's Landon Lupi ran track for South Dakota State this past spring and this fall is playing football for the Jacks who on Saturday will play North Dakota State for the Great Western Conference championship.

Derrick McCauley, a 2004 Aberdeen Central graduate, has enrolled at Black Hills State University in Spearfish this fall; he is red-shirting this year for the men's basketball team. Derrick took last year off after attending Central Community College in Columbus, Neb. and playing basketball in the spring semester.

Busch survives difficult first year, looks ahead to sterling sophomore year at Chadron

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

CHADRON, Neb. - "You know, I wasn't really planning on playing college ball until the end of my high school senior season," said Sunni Busch, a 2006 Todd County high school graduate who is in her sophomore year at Chadron State College, an NCAA Division II school in northwest Nebraska, "we did not accomplish what we set out to do, make state and do well there, so I felt I needed to keep playing basketball; Chadron was close and they offered the best scholarship package."

During her freshman year, Busch, played in 24 of Chadron's 27 games, started 15 games and averaged 21 minutes a game. Sunni led her team in scoring, rebounding and blocked shots; she averaged 11.9 points a game, 7.0 rebounds and blocked 10 shots from her guard position. She also was third in assists and fourth in steals.

"If I was going to quit basketball it would have been last year, it was the most difficult year I have ever had," said Busch after looking back on struggles with her coach, "I felt that I wasn't learning a thing and the team just wasn't going anywhere; after I told a few people that I probably wouldn't come back to Chadron, the coach called me in and I just told him how I honestly felt - he told me that I'd probably spend the rest of the year on the bench."

Following a meeting with the athletic director where Sunni was advised to just tough it out, Sunni admitted it was awkward for a while, especially when the team was heading towards a 2-25 year.

"Chadron ended up as my choice also because I knew they hadn't done well in previous years and I thought I could play right away and not red shirt and maybe have an impact immediately," said Busch, "I just didn't realize how tough it could be. I had also come from a winning high school program where we won a good majority of our games, losing game after game it was hard to get your winning mentality back."

Chadron State's Sunni Busch drives on the defense during a home game last December against Ft. Lewis College of Durango, Colo.

After 13 seasons, Tom Anderson decided to resign as Chadron head coach. Mike Maloney was hired at the end of the school year, one of 87 candidates for the job. He is looking forward to getting the Chadron program back on a winning track.

Sunni is majoring in human services and wants to return to the Rosebud and work with kids, troubled children; I would like to be able to show them that there is something better, said Busch. Some of her classes have made an immediate impact.

She took a nutrition class and feels she is eating much better and her death and dying class talked about suicide in Tuesday's class, a subject that is having an incredible impact on her reservation today.

"With what is happening at home, you can't help but think about it all the time, we need positive role models for our youth," said Busch, "they don't have any support, there doesn't seem to be anyone to help them along, to offer them a little hope and when they take their own life, they just don't realize how many people it affects, they do not understand that it is not just their problem that it affects tons of people and affects the lives of so many family and friends. Schools should get more involved and include a course like death and dying in the curriculum."

This year's Chadron Lady Eagles scrimmaged Sheridan College and Western Nebraska Community college before playing an exhibition game with the University of Wyoming, last year's WNIT champions. Busch and teammate Samantha Duncan both scored 10 points each in the loss.

"The whole college game is different, you have to work hard to play with a number of players you've never played with," said Busch, "in high school we played together for many years so college was a real adjustment. Also, we always played zone defense in high school and even with last year, I really never understood man to man defense but this year it is a totally different story, we practice defense over half of each practice every day and college ball is more conservative or more structured, you run plays and you really stress fundamentals of the game, it seems to hold you back sometimes but in a good way you play more fundamentally sound and if you don't do it that way you would be hurting your team."

Busch admits that some days you enjoy it and other days it is more like work, that it can be stressful, long days of hard work; sometimes it seems that you are playing basketball half the day but if we are going to meet our team goals of winning more games than we lose and qualifying for the RMAC tournament, the work is necessary, she admits.

"Stay in shape throughout the summer and if you are just entering college, you should arrive in the best shape of your life," Busch said about high school students thinking about going to college and participating in a sport, "I just wasn't as motivated as I should have been, I struggled working out by myself but don't be discouraged, play the game as you know how to."

Chadron opens their formal season on Saturday, Nov. 17 hosting Southwest Minnesota State before traveling to Kearney to play Upper Iowa and Kansas Newman on Friday and Saturday after Thanksgiving and playing South Dakota Tech on Nov. 30 in Rapid City and Black Hills State in Spearfish on Dec. 1.

"College is not as hard as people make it out to be, it is doable and everyone should consider it," said Busch, "and yes I was homesick for the entire first year up to a month before school let out then sometime during the summer, I started to look forward to coming back, more than I thought I would. I've definitely grown by being in college, I've had a chance to get my priorities in better order, family is definitely up there, you lose a number of friends when you go to school and your family is there; the experience has been great, there are so many different and diverse people with no stereotyping going on and more than anything else there are many opportunities for Native Americans to go to school, financial aid is available, cost shouldn't be a factor, so do it."

McCauley sets the pace at Bismarck State for new freshman crop

BISMARCK - After helping to lead Lower Brule and Little Wound to Lakota Nation Invitational titles and Pierre and Little Wound to State championship games, TJ McCauley, a 2007 Little Wound graduate enrolled at Bismarck State College this fall where he received a scholarship to play basketball.

McCauley

Bismarck State took third in this past weekend's preseason Mon-Dak tournament hosted by United Tribes in Bismarck. They are 4-1 on the season, McCauley is averaging 17.6 points a game. In the Mystics opener, a 111-73 win over Canadian Mennonite University, TJ had 19 points, two rebounds and three assists; Bismarck downed Red River College 97-76 as TJ had 18 points, nine rebounds and four assists; in a 91-83 win over Lake Region State TJ totaled 23 points, three rebounds and four assists, in the 89-76 loss to Williston State, TJ had 23 points, four rebounds and two assists while in their 82-78 win over Miles Community College, TJ finished with five points, four rebounds and four assists. Bismarck will play Salish Kootenai College and Sitting Bull College in the Warren Arman Classic on Friday and Saturday in Bismarck.

Tyann Pourier, a 2006 Little Wound graduate is playing ball for Bismarck State College as well, Kansas and Kyal Middletent/Lower Brule played football for Dakota Wesleyan this year, Wendy Schmaltz/Todd County, played volleyball at DWU, Rich Charging Cloud/Red Cloud and Kenny St. Pierre/Wagner played football at Haskell and Kelsey Brave Eagle/Little Wound is playing basketball at Haskell.

Robin Webber, a 2007 graduate of Pine Ridge is playing basketball for Brown Mackie College, a junior college in Salina, Kan. Webber hit a double double with 11 points and 13 rebounds in a 62-59 loss to Kansas Wesleyan JV, hit five three's and finished with 16 points in a 70-46 loss to Labette and scored 11 points in a 63-42 win over KWU JV. Matt St. John, Little Wound's Tyson Heart and Pine Ridge's Tyrel Salway are playing for United Tribe's men's basketball team. Cheyenne Eagle Butte's Brittany Azure and Jordyn Brown are playing basketball for Williston State College in North Dakota.

Pourier steals show in Rockyford School Halloween costume contest

ROCKYFORD - Terri Dawn Pourier, a fifth grader at Rockyford School entered the Halloween costume contest disguised as long time local KILI Radio fixture, Tom Casey, and brought the house down at Rockyford School. With a long beard, a bright yellow bandana, bib overalls, a large pot belly and a KILI Radio portable broadcaster, Pourier won the third through fifth grade division and gave everyone a good laugh as she paraded into the gym

The school's Halloween costume contest was divided up into four student divisions and one adult division on Halloween day. In addition to Pourier, Maioha Kingi took second in the third through fifth division and Dustin Gourd was third. In the PK through Kindergarten division Xavier Big Crow took first, Jaron Phelps was second and Lalissa Watkins was third. In first through second grade Sarge Denny was first, Darren Cross was second and Tyler Bettelyoun was third. In the sixth through eighth division Jory Williams took first, Robert Little Dog was second and Angel Jumping Eagle was third.

In the finals they played Pahin Sinte from Porcupine School and defeated them to become the champions of that hand game tournament in the Elementary school division.

The next Teca Wacipi Okolakiciye is Dec. 1 at Batesland School hosted by Batesland and Rockyford.

Sicangu Nation treaty and sovereignty rights meeting discusses water projects, treaty issues and tokala societies

ST. FRANCIS - Digmann Hall was the site for the Nov. 2 and 3 Sicangu Nation Treaty and Sovereignty Rights meeting. Attendance was fairly good for the two day event at 72 participants. The meeting called by Darrell Kills In Sight was sponsored in part by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Mni Wiconi Project.

On opening day, Sam Wounded Head, Sicangu elder of the RST Min Wiconi Project gave an opening Lakota prayer and Archie Little of the Itahcan Omniciye traditional council gave a welcome address.

The agenda items contained a number of vital topics including, water rights, treaty issues in the Cobell case, I.R.A tribal governments, treaties and the oyate, and treaties and the tokala societies.

As in past meetings, all those present were able to properly introduce themselves, while the Yankton Sioux treaty oyate were recognized for their attendance. RST Water Resources, Syed Huq gave an overview on the Mni Wiconi Project which included the future of the project, non-Indian water rights on the Rosebud, 2013 funding from Congress and a statement about the Winter's Doctrine.

Huq also noted that his office monitors 28 wells on the RST water system. A discussion also ensued on the rights of underground water tables and water permits issued by tribes and the states.

Legal matters and the courts was an agenda item and it was determined that most courts have a tendency to ignore or shy away from the issue of treaties and that some treaty members felt that the only way to refer a case into the federal system was by international law with support from United Nations member countries who may be sympathetic to treaty tribes.

On the Cobell case, there was a concern that it might spell doom for the future of land issues and could affect current court cases which are currently being litigated. On the issues of treaties and the oyate, there was concern over the Commerce Clause, the Wheeler-Howard Act and the 1934 and 1936 Acts and whether or not these gave Congress complete control over tribal nations.

Meanwhile, the Yankton Sioux discussed their litigation with the state over jurisdictional issues, while the Fort Peck Sioux discussed their treaties as natural laws designed to protect them in today's more contemporary society.

Treaties and their relationship to tokala societies was also a topic of discussion. Such societies still exist within traditional governments and were seen as a safeguard for protection and beliefs.

To encapsulate the sentiment of the closing session, Darrell Kills In Sight wrote on behalf of the gathering, "Why do we shy away and not support those that still believe in an honored system, the language of treaties we carry. We still pray for you in our language that you will not forget us. The 1934 I.R.A Act and its 100 year contract is almost expired as of 2014 and Congress knows this."

Eagle Nest homes provides Homebuyers Program

By Jennifer Richards
Lakota Funds

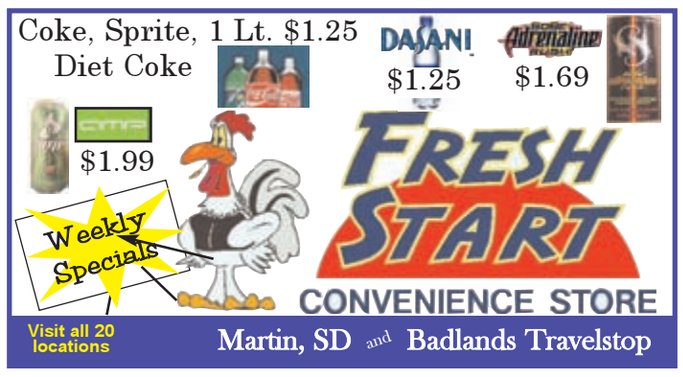
KYLE - Lakota Funds originally partnered with several corporations to develop and build Eagle Nest Homes located in Wanblee between 1994 and 1997. The homes were developed through a program known as the Low Income Housing Tax Credit Program.

This program allows for homes to be offered for rental at a lower than normal amount of rent, and can provide the renter with an opportunity to purchase the home at the end of the rental period. The Low Income Housing Tax rental period is a fifteen year time commitment.

Lakota Funds is coming close to the end of that fifteen year period, and is working with current residents of Eagle Nest Homes to prepare them to purchase their home, at the end of the rental period.

Lakota Funds has developed an Option to Purchase Program. Current residents that are interested in reviewing the possibility of purchasing their home are entering into an Option to Purchase Contract.

This contract does not obligate or commit the resident to purchase the home, but provides the opportunity for them to purchase the home, if they decide to move forward with the purchase.



Lakota Funds has been holding monthly Homebuyer Club meetings. These meetings are offered for a period of an hour. The meetings present a variety of different topics regarding homeownership. To date, we have discussed how to be approved for a mortgage, how to complete a budget to prepare for homeownership, how to review home and life insurance needs, how to repair your credit, and how to increase your credit score.

This program will continue, as we want to work with any homebuyers on the reservation, who may be interested in purchasing a home.

We are not limited to the services that we can provide, in preparing you to meet your homeownership dream. Currently Lakota Funds has (2) two bedroom vacant houses awaiting occupancy.

Homeownership is the quickest and easiest way to establish personal wealth. By purchasing a home, you can begin to develop a saving program, provide future housing for your children, and gain money on the value of the home, as you continue to pay for the home, and as the home increases in value.

The Lakota Funds is interested in working with you. Please contact the Lakota Funds office at 455-2500, if you have any questions.

Long Warrior chosen for Leadership Training in Policymaking

MISSION - Tamra Long Warrior of Mission has been selected to participate in the statewide leadership program Partners in Policymaking.

Coordinator of the leadership program, Sandy Stocklin Hook, of South Dakota Advocacy Services in Pierre noted, "The committee who selected the participants for Partners in Policymaking does an awesome job in filling the class. Choosing the 25 participants is always difficult as we receive so many excellent and qualified applications. For this coming year's class, we received around 55 applications and the committee felt the application from Long Warrior was exceptional and she will be a valuable asset to the class. Her application showed desire to learn and advocacy qualities, along with leadership qualities and knowledge that will definitely add to the class atmosphere."

Partners' training gives individuals knowledge of available resources and assistance to vastly improve their futures. It helps to open doors to a new world of opportunities, not only just for themselves and their families, but also for the entire disability community

One weekend per month from November through April these individuals make time from their own hectic schedules to participate in a unique program that ultimately leads to richer, fuller, and more productive lives for themselves and their family members.

Partners in a national leadershnip, empowerment program. South Dakota is beginning its 16th year of providing the program and has 354 graduates state-wide.

Partners is funded in part by grants from the South Dakota Council on Developmental Disabilities, Center for Disabilities at Sanford School of Medicine at USD, Children's Care Hospital & School and South Dakota Parent Connection. South Dakota Advocacy Services facilitates and coordinates the training.

Project aimed at ending shortage of American Indian educators

PIERRE (AP) - A federal grant is funding an effort to recruit, educate and place more American Indians as administrators in schools that have larger numbers of Indian students.

The Indian Leadership Education and Development program, called I LEAD, is a partnership of the U.S. Department of Education and Montana State University in Bozeman.

``There's a big need there,'' said Keith Moore, Indian education coordinator for the state Education Department. He said that fewer than 1 percent of administrators in South Dakota's schools are Indian.

``Montana State has developed a model that we think will be effective in getting more American Indian teachers into administrative positions in our state,'' Moore said. Overall, 20 applicants are being accepted into the program.

It's the first time South Dakota has taken part in the project, which has been under way in Montana.

``We are thankful that they invited South Dakota to be a part of this important project,'' Moore said.

Educators in the program can either earn their master's or specialist's degree in educational leadership and their certification as a principal or superintendent, according to Moore. The federal grant covers the cost of their education.

``We're hoping to train and prepare folks who are going to be highly effective, who can go back into the communities and into the area of Indian education,'' Moore said.

Participants must belong to a federally or state-recognized tribe or have a parent or grandparent who is.

They also must agree to be an administrator in a school or education-related agency with a substantial Indian population, and they must be certified to teach in South Dakota and hold a bachelor's degree.

``They need to understand the culture of the schools they'll be working in and be a stabilizing force in those schools,'' Moore said.

Classes will be offered using online and in-class instruction. Participants will also spend six weeks during the summer studying at Bozeman.

Poor Bear attends Dartmouth College Native Fly-In Program

MARTIN - Jolena Poor Bear recently attended this year's annual four-day all-expense-paid Native Fly-In program at Dartmouth College in Hanover, New Hampshire in October. The program provided 35 very talented Native American, Alaska Native or Native Hawaiian seniors from across the nation an opportunity to gain knowledge about Dartmouth's academic, admission, and financial aid resources.

In addition to learning more about Dartmouth College as an institution, Jolena was able to interact with a large cross section of minority college students, several faculty members; and also attend a variety of information sessions, academic presentations and social events.

The demand to accommodate every student interested in attending this program often exceeds the capacity; last year over 300 students applied. To be accepted, participants must have challenged themselves by taking upper-level college prep math and science courses, earned excellent grades all four years of high school, scored high on the ACT test, and have a strong connection to their Native American community, and/or tribe.

This spring, Jolena will graduate with honors from Bennett County High School. She is the daughter of Cindy Wheeler of Martin. Next fall Jolena will pursue her undergraduate degree in International Health at either Dartmouth College, or Georgetown University, in Washington D.C.

Virtual High School Registration

Continues at Red Shirt Community School, Wolf Creek School, Batesland School and Rockyford School for interested students who are not going to school but would like to enroll for high school and work for a high school diploma at the new Shannon County Virtual High School, call Vicki Grant at 288-1921.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I know I wrote to you before, I am wondering what do you see for me, I am having a hard time, financially and with school, really with my whole life.

I just don?t know what to do, the kid's dad wants to give me a hard time again.

I was trying to talk to somebody else and here he comes along again and ruins everything for me. Why can't he just move on and leave me alone. I can't even think straight anymore, I was doing fine talking to someone until he came along. Now he hardly talks to me, it looks like I can't even go back to school, I just can't even think I really need to finish school can you give me some advice?

I am under a lot of stress that I just want to leave the rez and also my kids and start drinking again. Can you help me with some advice?

Totally confused

Dear Totally confused:

One day at a time. God will give you an excuse to drink every day - but don't use any excuse for what you do. How upset can your ex make you?

What if you just didn't care what he said? What if when you saw him approaching you just went inside, or drove away, or didn't acknowledge him? If he is violent, call the police. If he is drunk, call the police. If he threatens you, call the police.

I think you like to complain about him. I see you thinking about how mad he makes you and thinking about it and thinking about it and thinking about it.

You can go to school regardless of how nuts your ex is. You can do anything you need to do, if you decide that it doesn't matter if he is nuts or not.

If he is bothering you then get a restraining order and call the police and keep calling them until he gets the message.

Ignore him, and if he won't let you, then that is harassment and that is a crime so get a restraining order and once again, call the police. Other than that, quit using him as an excuse for what you can or can't do, where you can or can't go, and how you do or don't act. He is not responsible any longer at all for you - you are.

The thing about life is, if you live long enough, and didn't choose the very best mate for you the first time, then you may have a lot of exes - and life does go on.

I know that financially you are having a rough time. Be sure and sign up for financial aid at school. Be sure and check into all the programs available to help you.

If you don't finish school you will continue to have a rough time financially for a very long time - and if you do go, then your rough time just equals the amount of time it takes to graduate plus about six months. Go for the best route.

Good luck to you dear. Please don't fool yourself into blaming anyone for what you can or can't do it really is all up to you.

Your ex will leave you alone, by the way, pretty much in about two or three weeks because he is going to have another girl friend to drive crazy. She will keep him busy following her.

Blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

How are you? Well, I had a few questions to ask you. Any answers would be appreciated. I've been talking to others, getting different answers and being judged for the decisions I have made. I thought I knew what's best for myself, but confusion got the best of me, leaving me truly "lost."

So here goes, I have three beautiful children and a supportive boyfriend of five years.

On the outside, our relationship looks ,perfect, stable.

But there's a twist, as always. In the very beginning of our relationship, he cheated.

We built up trust, and I loved him again.

About five to six months back, at the end of my pregnancy, he cheated again. It still hurts. Then rumors started to circulate.

He won't tell who she is because he says she's embarrassing. Is that true, or does he keep her a secret so he can do it again?

Does she really live somewhere else? Do I know her? Does he really love me and is he really sorry?

I think I took him back too fast, I know I should leave and think on my own. But it tears me up just thinking about leaving.

We use to always laugh and have fun. We still do, "but in a don't let him get too close" sort of way. I don't trust him anymore.

What do I do? Is what we have true love or momentary love?

When we first met, a medicine man gave us two tobacco pouches to wear and keep always, for protection, was the pouch really meant for me? Or his ex girlfriend? The man said, "give it to your girlfriend."

Thanks to his actions, I am insecure and feel like I was being used all along.

Did he go out on me without me knowing it? When we split in December, was he with somebody then?

And did he keep a friendship with her until we split again in February?

How do I get over being hurt and confused? Will paying him back and giving him a taste of his own medicine teach him a lesson? Or will leaving for awhile do it? Do you see us getting married and moving, or do we stay stuck in this rut forever?

Did I really change him for the best or is that something he just says. Is he really the one for me?

Or is my Mr. Right somewhere? Also I saw a friend at the casino recently, I used to have a crush on, does he think about me too? Or is that someone I should stay away from?

Living with a cheater

Dear Living with a cheater:

Tough huh? I know that this is rough on you. I want you to understand that you are not doing anything wrong right now by staying where you are.

You are just trying to figure things out and giving yourself enough time to do that. The only one that will look bad if you try to teach him a lesson is you. Healing of the heart does not come with a punch, pinch, yelling, or getting even.

It can only come when the gentleness of love that you feel, returns.

Can your love return? Yes, sometimes it does, and sometimes it doesn't. Wait and see. If you can't let it go then make a decision to leave.

At this point in time, that seems to be the decision you are getting to. I see you reaching this decision because you just don't feel that you can ever get the trust back for this man that you feel is necessary inside of a successful mate relationship.

Your boyfriend doesn't want you to know who he messed up with because it would just cause everybody grief.

He isn't being unfaithful right now, and that is what really counts. It may be too much for you to continue to wonder about, because you will start to suspect everybody.

I wouldn't pursue marriage until you are sure of you.

He may ask you to marry him sometime very soon because he really doesn't want to lose you, and he feels that if he marries you then you will stay with him.

The biggest question is however, do you really want to marry him? Can you let the past go?

Was he faithful when you two split up? What do you think?

Please dear, give yourself a break, stop spinning in your head, feel with your heart.

Can you see yourself with this man ten years from now...or has his shine diminished with the tarnish of not one indiscretion, but at least two.

Dear Anna,

How are you doing today? Hope you are in good health with all these questions you guide us with.

I wanted to ask you about my relationship future. I went back to college and I think I am doing good so far.

As you told me the last time that I was headed for something that I was honestly not ready for.

I want to know about my ex-boyfriend. will we ever be together again? He is a little bit older than I am. And I have been trying to actually get over him then when I think he has forgotten my phone rings and there he is on the other end I try so hard to not answer but I have to. I call him also but I think I get him in trouble with his girlfriend. Will it just be better if we were just friends?

Wondering about my ex

Dear Wondering about my ex:

Yep. Unless he is without a girl friend he is no friend to either of you. Keep heart, there is a new man coming. I think his name may be Don or Donald.

He is a while away yet, until you get over your ex and are ready for him. Your ex, by the way, is just sort of using you honey. Get as smart as you are.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

~Grace Mae Smith Waln~

"Pte Yuha Win"

PARMELEE - Grace Mae Smith (Pte Yuha Win) was born Oct. 26, 1917 at Hay Stack Butte in eastern Todd County. She was the youngest daughter of Todd and Margaret (Afraid Of Eagle) Smith. Grace spent most of her childhood years in Salt Camp near Parmelee with her extended family, the Mni Skuya Tiospaye. Grace attended school until the eighth grade.

Joseph "Bad" Waln often told the story about when he first saw Grace Smith. It was around 1937 and he rode his horse from his folks' ranch into Parmelee one day. Grace caught his eye immediately and she was the most beautiful woman he ever saw. His horse whistled at her and Bad thought "I'll be back." He rode back into town that evening, introduced himself to Grace and their courtship followed.

They were married in a civil ceremony in Winner on April 13, 1938. On June 14, 1938 they had their marriage blessed by Father Eugene Buechel, S.J. at the Catholic Church in Parmelee. In 1988 they celebrated 50 years of marriage by renewing their wedding vows at the Old He Dog Catholic Church.

Grace and Bad celebrated 60 years of marriage on April 13, 1998. Their extended family surprised them with an anniversary dinner at He Dog School and it was clearly one of the happiest days of their lives as they again renewed their wedding vows. The saddest day of Grace's life was when Bad passed away quietly in his sleep at their home in He Dog on Feb. 16, 1999.

Grace and Bad started ranching in the Parmelee area around 1949. In the early 1950s they established a string of bucking horses and sponsored several local rodeos. In 1968, Grace and Bad, along with Bud Whipple and Jim Bradford, founded the B & W Rodeo Company.

For many years, B & W Rodeo Company put on hundreds of rodeos throughout the country. Pickup trucks, horse trailers and semi-rigs would caravan down the roads in the tri-state region. Grace was always right there in the middle of the work. She did everything from pulling bucking horses, serving as rodeo secretary, cooking for the entire rodeo crew, cleaning up after everyone and getting them to bed, along with everything else in between.

Not only did Grace work side by side with Bad in the rodeo business, she also helped Bad build one of the most successful Indian ranches in the country. Bad used to say he "couldn't have done it without Grace."

Grace was a rather quiet woman and she never said too much about the business. When she did speak up, everyone listened. She was extremely smart and she was able to do everything that needed to be done to make the ranch and rodeo businesses succeed.

When anybody stopped in at the Waln Ranch in He Dog, Grace would welcome them with a cup of coffee and something to eat. She never forgot a birthday or an anniversary. You could always count on getting a greeting card from Grace and Bad.

Grace's heart was as pure as gold, her arms were always there when you needed a hug, she gave you shoulder to cry on and she was never afraid to tell you that she loved you. Grace was always there for her extended family members under any circumstances.

Grace left the world she lived in for 90 years and one day on Oct. 27, 2007. She passed away quietly in her sleep, surrounded by her grandkids, great grandkids and great nieces and nephews. She left us to join her husband Bad, her great-great granddaughter Aaliyah Grace, her parents Margaret and Todd, her brothers Clarence Sr., Todd Jr., Gilbert, Elijah, Hardin, Claude, her sisters Florence, Eva, Corrine, Stella, Jenny, Edith, Ruth, Doreen and Elizabeth.

She is survived by her grandchildren: Vi, Kathy, Bud, Joanna, Chris, Charlotte, Sara and Elijah, adopted son Carl, her youngest brother Alonzo Bordeaux, and special in-laws Bud and Sing Bradford. Grandma/Aunt Grace also leaves to mourn 15 great grandchildren, 7 great-great grandchildren and a host of nieces, nephews, great nieces and nephews, and great-great nieces and nephews.

An all night family wake with a Catholic Rosary was held at the Waln Ranch in He Dog on Oct. 28. A public wake was held at He Dog School on Oct. 29 with Chief Lorenzo D. Shields, Sr. offering traditional Native American Church prayers. Funeral mass was offered by Father Tim Manatt, S.J. at the St. Charles Catholic Church in St. Francis on Oct. 30.

Mike and Jake, the Shelbourn's team of horses, pulled a wagon carrying Grace to her final resting place next to her husband Bad on the Waln Ranch in He Dog. The wagon was followed by horseback rider Beez Waln, who led a rider less horse in Grace's honor.

Pallbearers were great grandsons: Courtney Waln, Tim Flammond, Brian Red Feather, and great-great nephews: Frank Waln, Nicodeamus Waln and Charles Waln. Honorary pallbearers were all grandchildren, great grandchildren, great-great grandchildren, nieces, nephews and brother Alonzo Bordeaux.

Sandoz Chapel of the Pines was in charge of arrangements.

Wind turbine to provide electricity for KILI Radio

PORCUPINE BUTTE – Last month engineers out of Montana, representatives from Honor the Earth and the Intertribal Cooperative on Utility Policy, a crew from Rosebud, KILI staff and interested community members were present as the foundation was poured for KILI's planned 65KW wind turbine. Most recently, the plan was to install the tower and turbine Nov. 8 and 9 but it has been postponed until sometime in December.

"We hope this project becomes a model for Indian Country, small housing projects, businesses, non-profits and small groups to tap into a renewable energy resource and save electricity costs," said Pat Spears, Intertribal Coop director, "the project will cost about $117,000 with Honor the Earth finding over half of it from their Energy Justice Campaign, Icoop has an interest with Native Energy and the Bureau is committed to $43,000 and that's where the holdup is, the federal government's continuing resolution process each year when they are approving a new budget."

SFM teams with Betty Ford Center to provide family recovery, training

ST. FRANCIS - On. Nov. 19, St. Francis Mission entered into a historic three-year partnership with the Betty Ford Center to bring family counseling and support services to the residents of the Rosebud Reservation. Through the partnership, St. Francis will offer unique family recovery counseling and programs beginning in January of 2008.

St. Francis Mission staff will receive training from the Betty Ford Center enabling them to conduct week-long family recovery programs and provide one-on-one individual counseling. The Center will support and consult with St. Francis Mission's staff on an ongoing basis to help them address the problems of drug and alcohol addiction on the Rosebud Reservation.

As part of the agreement, the newly created Betty Ford Institute will be working with local Lakota people to design a program which is culturally specific and sensitive.

It's goal is to train local Lakota people to run family counseling programs.

"This partnership opens up wonderful new ways by which families on the Rosebud Reservation can heal from the effects of alcoholism and other addictions." Said Fr. John Hatcher, S.J., Superior of St. Francis Mission.

The Mission had already shown its commitment to addressing the addiction issues by opening two drug and alcohol recovery centers in the past four years. "Our partnership with the Betty Ford Center will assist us in developing a model to address addiction in a way which is culturally sensitive and which takes into account the family dynamics of addiction." Fr. Hatcher said.

Resources and individuals from Alkali Lake Reserve in Canada will be consulted in program development, since the Alkali Lake Reserve is a native community with a long and strong sobriety movement.

Patrick Haggerson, a counselor at the Betty Ford Center, who worked for many years on the Alkali Lake Reserve, will be the main counselor from the Betty Ford Institute to work on the Rosebud Reservation.

Johnson poses questions on suicide prevention to Indian Health Service

WASHINGTON - In the wake of a suicide epidemic which is plaguing Lakota tribes on the northern plains and Indian Country, Sen. Tim Johnson posed several questions to the acting Director of the Indian Health Service, Robert McSwain, last Friday.

The letter was sent on the eve of the National Day of Observance for Survivors of Suicide which was Nov. 17. The senator wrote, "We are not doing enough to fight this deadly epidemic that is taking the lives of our most precious resource, our children." Johnson asked McSwain to focus more agency resources on the youth suicide epidemic that plagues Indian communities, in response from tribal members.

"One of the most important resources we can provide is the availability of mental health services that include prevention, intervention and aftercare services," Johnson said in the letter to McSwain. "While I understand your agency cannot fix many of the hopeless conditions that face our native youth, your agency can do more to provide mental health resources to our reservations."

"As you know, this deadly plague is not waning and in some cases we are seeing an increase in 'suicide clusters.' Almost all of the recent studies indicate that suicide is most prevalent in American Indian youth and especially our young Native males. We are not doing enough to fight this deadly epidemic that is taking the lives of our most precious resource, our children," said Johnson.

According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention's website, in 2004, Indian suicides accounted for half of the total suicides in South Dakota for the age group of 24 and under. This was at a rate of 33.2 per 100,000 as opposed to the national average of 10.1 per 100,000 for American Indian/Alaskan Native youth up to age 24. For non-natives nationally the rate is 4.49 per 100,000 for the same age group. I am certain, however, that you are aware of the statistics.

"In these economically impoverished areas that are riddled with problems such as substance abuse, strained economic environments, and high rates of mental and physical abuse, we must concentrate our efforts on combating the factors that lead to suicide. One of the most important resources we can provide is the availability of mental health services that include prevention, intervention and aftercare services. Recently, I was contacted by the mother of a victim with her plea to focus on the suicide crisis facing the reservation. In her letter, she stressed the lack of mental health professionals working on her reservation and the significant expectations put on those that do work there. In addition to this letter, I was forwarded a tribal council-passed resolution that passed

Oti Wote coffee shop and office products store open

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

MISSION - At a time when a large percentage of disposable income is leaving the Rosebud and not being re-invested, Eric and Melissa Nixon and their extended family are working to change that, one business at a time. Make that two businesses; the Nixons have opened the Oti Wote coffee shop and Native Solutions office products out of the same building.

Eric says Native Solutions was created long before Oti Wote was envisioned, however, both are currently open for business and offering full service to local patrons.

SGU Lakota Studies instructor, Duane Hollow Horn Bear, is credited with naming the coffee shop and the name implies a place where one may have been born or a homestead.

The Oti Wote coffee shop is a welcome option for those folks who wish to grab a quick bite to eat over noon hour or simply visit over a good cup of Starbucks coffee during the morning or late afternoon. The café specializes in sandwiches, soup and salads in addition to muffins, cake and skillet bread or "gabubu" bread as Lakota people call it. Tracy Spotted Calf who won first in the "gabubu" cooking contest at the Rosebud Fair makes the delicious bread.

The interior design of the Oti Wote coffee shop.

Nixon said he had a tribal business license for Native Solutions over four years ago with the help of the Rosebud Economic Development Corporation and with the business up and running, he understands the discipline and hard work that goes into making a small business successful. The office products business is able to offer patrons and area programs a full line of office products from their supplier Arrow earlier this year which echoes her very sentiments. It is not my intent to disparage those medical professionals that are currently working to address the problem, but to recognize them and provide them with the additional help and resources they need," said Johnson.

Johnson also inquired as to whether or not the Federal Emergency Management Agency had additional mental health providers who could come to South Dakota and the Aberdeen area to assist. He wrote, "I implore you to focus whatever resources that you have at your disposal for mental health services that include prevention, intervention and aftercare services that will help relieve this dreadful epidemic that continues to spread throughout South Dakota and across Indian Country."

Johnson asked the status of Commissioned Corps staff, specifically the Ready Responders division at the Health Service Corps, and their ability to be in South Dakota to assist with the immediate crisis, specifically the situation facing the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. Another was about the number of mental health care positions that were vacant in the Aberdeen Area service units and included providers and behavioral mental health technicians.

Finally, Sen. Johnson inquired as to the accuracy of the suicide data that is collected by the Indian Health Service. He asked why there was a disparity between that of I.H.S. and law enforcement.

SFM: family recovery

St. Francis Mission will also have access to the full resources of the Betty Ford Center in its attempt to create a family recovery model for its programs.

Robert Doody of RES, said, "Our connection to the Betty Ford Center goes back three years when several of the staff from St. Francis Mission participated in the Professionals in Residence Program at the Betty Ford Center." Furthermore, he notes that St. Francis Mission has devoted significant resources in the partnership. Four people are already receiving training from the Betty Ford Center and will be involved in structuring a recovering program that will be offered at SFM.

The new programs will be offered once a month at the Ici Mani Ya Waste center next to the St. Charles Catholic church. Plans are to extend to Spring Creek, White River and Mission and offer one on one drug and alcohol counseling at the White River Recovery Center.

Some examples of cultural sensitivity that will be built into the new programs will be sensitive to traditional Lakota spirituality and customs.

The capacity for the week long family evening programs will be 20-30 people and staff from the Betty Ford Center along with staff in training from SFM.

The new partnership is the fruit of many years of contact between St. Francis Mission staff and the Betty Ford Center.

For additional information please contact Robert Doody at 605-747-2361.

KYLE - Last week, the Little Wound High School student council coordinated a winter festival and banquet for grades 9-12 students. Above are some of the participants in the Winter Festival: Back row L-R: Jessica Yellow Boy, Katie Hernandez, Mia Gomez, Alyssa Looks Twice, Bethany Brewer, Dakota Rose Flying Hawk, Jill Black Hawk, Emmy Clifford, Georgia LaDeaux, Katie Novotny

Rosebud Soup Kitchen hosts Thanksgiving dinner

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Soup Kitchen played host to several tribal members with a turkey dinner with "all the trimmings" last Sunday evening. The event was a part of the regularly scheduled menu which the soup kitchen offers to the hungry, homeless, children and elders each week.

The soup kitchen Thanksgiving meal was coordinate by Marian and Bill Sorace.

Lori Burritt of the American Indian Relief Council of Rapid City was on hand to serve on the line and conduct a brief site visit for AIRC. She noted that her office does outreach in Idaho, Montana, North Dakota and most of the Lakota reservations in South Dakota. On this particular evening the AIRC had provided turkey and mashed potatoes for the event. AIRC also assists several other local Rosebud entities.

Burritt also noted that her office extends a Breakfast in the Bag for residents of the Rosebud and will soon have applications ready for elders to apply for a Christmas fruit basket.

Marian One Star-Sorace began the soup kitchen in her basement in 1994 and then moved to the Rosebud Sioux tribal building where she has offered some very delicious and nutritious meals to the hungry and homeless ever since. Bill, Sorace's husband later joined her volunteer efforts along with Valerie Sorace and Kay Kary who often make bread and also serve the food. Another one will be held for Christmas.

Bennett County leads the way in all conference selections

MARTIN – Bennett County, West River conference football champs, received nine all conference selections with four honorable mentions while Red Cloud, conference runner-up, and Todd County received seven with two honorable mentions each, Little Wound had six and one while Pine Ridge earned three with four honorable mentions.

Three seniors and two juniors earned selections on both sides of the line – Brice Hornbeck/Little Wound was named first team all conference as a wide receiver and as a defensive back, Red Cloud's Dave Giago was selected as a defensive end and a tight end on offense, Todd County's Mike Neiss was chosen as a wide receiver and return specialist while Little Wound's Jacey Mesteth a junior, earned selections as a linebacker and fullback and Clint Sasse a junior at Bennett County was chosen as a defensive back and running back.

West River 2007 all conference selectrions included:

Business Products which is Oneida owned and operated business.

Christian "Tuffy" Morrison is a close friend of the business owners and was instrumental in helping to initiate the business products line. Nixon says that he and Dave Espinoza operate the office products portion of the business, while Melissa, Jeri and Marge run the coffee shop.

After serving as a Rosebud Sioux tribal council representative, Nixon, said that he and Melissa continued to do consultant work and that enabled them to put more planning into their businesses. The original intent was to create a family run business where family could all chip in and work in an area that highlighted their skills. For example, Margie Moran, Melissa's mother, originally received her training in the culinary arts from UTTEC and now is able to utilize her cooking skills. Jeri Oliver takes orders, bakes, makes a variety of delicious coffees and operates the cash register.

Oti Wote features Indian tacos on Mondays and "gabooboo" bread with soup on Thursdays and one can call ahead for a takeout order.

Plans are to expand Oti Wote so that more dining space is available for customers as it currently has four tables. Nixon says that the business will be open on Saturdays and pancakes will most likely be the specialty that day.

Oti Wote and Native Solutions are located on Highway 18 and their phone number is 856-2102.

The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce announces it's second Business of the Month,
Pine Ridge Vision Center
Funding for this project is provided by the Administration for Native Americans.

For years, many of our customers were driving from the Pine Ridge reservation to our offices in Gordon and Chadron. We wanted to help. We opened an office for our customers on Main Street in Pine Ridge and made a committment to provide our customers with the best vision care possible.

We're proud to continue supporting our customers from our beautiful new building and convenient location off Highway 18 in Pine Ridge. We continue with our deep committment and respect for the Pine Ridge Community by providing the most professional and up to date services available. Stop in and see us in our new location and let us help you with your total vision health!

TOTAL COMMITMENT TO YOUR VISION HEALTH
"Stop In & see our New Location" or Call: 867-2772

On behalf of the Veterans Day PowWow Committee we would like to express our gratitude to all those that helped to make the event a huge success!

First, we would like to say thank you to the Maintenance crew for making our school grounds look great. Next, thanks to the CHS Administration/School Board for help with the funding. We would like to also thank Reva for the great posters and Veterans program, the shop class for the really cool flag posts, to all those that helped cook and prepare the meals, Gertie Yankton and family, to those that helped with the clean up, to the 21st Century students that made the wonderful decorations and did a beautiful job at decorating, and to the 21st Century program for buying the decorations. If we forgot to mention anyone we apologize.

We had a very successful Veterans Program and powwow because of all those that helped.

Pila Miya!

Congratulations to Angel Yankton for Post 269 Queen! You do a great job at representing our legion.

Pine Ridge Vision Center selected November business of the month

PINE RIDGE -The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce has selected the Pine Ridge Vision Center as the November Business of the month.

The unique 4,400 square foot facility is the new kid on the block in Pine Ridge and also houses two rental suites occupied by Alltel Wireless and a University of Colorado program.

Dr. Vernon C. Rockey, administrative director of Pine Ridge Vision Center, as well as the two vision centers in Gordon and Chadron, envisions the new center carrying the bulk of the major patient load. Four full-time doctors keep each center fully staffed by rotating at all three locations.

In Pine Ridge, the vision center began as an idea to help patients with the adjustment of their glasses and dispensing free lens cleaner at a table in the back of Big Bats in 2003. It grew into its first tiny office on Main Street in Pine Ridge and finally to it present brand new location filled with nearly 25 of Dr. Rockey's hand-made, rustic, cabinetry.

"We decided if we were ever able to build we wanted the building to have all the frills that we had ever wanted. We always had thoughts of cutting back but the closer we got to the day of building we decided to go all the way. Fully handicap accessible, the entire building exterior is metal but the front is made out of T1-11 which is wood and the board walk is cedar and there are also some cedar steps."

Putting the comfort and well being of the patients first, was the innovative idea behind a majority of the new planned frills. They include a full service 600 frame dispensary, three preliminary examining rooms, a visual therapy room where young people are actually taught the ability to see. He said there are many people that have never learned to see properly, and a Visual Field room, where both side vision and front vision is tested for various eye diseases.

"We are now able to treat glaucoma and even perform pre and post surgical cooperation with an ophthalmologist when eye surgery is indicated for a patient," he said. There is also a room where people may sit comfortably while their eyes are being dilated.

Pine Ridge Vision Center has always contributed to the employment in Pine Ridge but more so now with the new larger floor plan. They have increased the number of locally hired employees from one and a part time to five employees. The employees are provided with weekly on-line training through resources from Vision Source and Office Mate.

Dr. Rockey credits the Indian Health Center with their successful welcome into the Pine Ridge area. "In the beginning IHS welcomed our 300 frame dispensary as they were writing so many prescriptions that had to be filled somewhere, so why not right in Pine Ridge," he said. Once the dispensary opened, five to six people a day wanted eye exams and the business began to grow.

Patients can log on to Pine Ridge Vision Centers interactive website by entering Pine Ridge vision into any search engine. Office hours are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. five days a week Monday through Friday. The phone number for Pine Ridge Vision center is 867-2772.

Lakota Funds presents to Vucurevich foundation, lists activities

By Jennifer Richards
Lakota Funds

KYLE - On Nov. 15, the Lakota Funds staff presented to the John T. Vucurevich Foundation visiting staff at the trade center.

Lakota Funds is hoping to achieve assistance from the foundation to continue to provide more services and classes to all members of the Pine Ridge Reservation interested in obtaining the information.

The Vucurevich Foundation was established in 1989 by its founder John T. Vucurevich who fully funded the foundation. The visitors from the foundation were Sandy Diegel, executive director, Paul Phelan, chief financial officer and Carmen Hansen, grant manager.

Lakota Funds staff and two clients presented all the programs that Lakota Funds has to offer.

The Individual Development Account program was discussed and the need for financial literacy in our communities was presented. All classes and training are open to the public wanting financial literacy and entrepreneur information. Lakota Funds mission is a community development organization actively promoting socio-economic sustainability of Oglala Lakota people on the reservation. It's culturally appropriate strategies include business loans, technical assistance, and targeted community and business development. This is possible with the collaboration of various funding resources and programs at Lakota Funds are to help make small business dreams, and hope for our future entrepreneurs' a reality.

Lakota Funds upcoming meetings/trainings are:

1. Financial Literacy Nov. 21 at the Pejuta Haka College Center in Kyle. This course is free and required for Individual Development Account Participants and for clients requesting a loan from Lakota Funds.

2. Native American Artist Meeting Nov. 26 at the Manderson College Center.

3. Lakota Nation Invitational Youth Financial Literacy Sessions Dec. 19-21 during the Lakota Nation Invitation Tournament for all interested high school students. Take off the orange plastic, put it in the oven for two hours. The temperature is 550 degrees and take it out of the oven and eat it.
By Utah Whirlwind Horse

When I get my turkey I'll take off the wrapper. Then put water in the bowl. Then put the turkey in the oven for 70 degrees. Then when it's done you clean inside of it to put the stuffing in. When you are done you get to pull the wish bone. Then you put it on the table and eat.
By Lucy Montileaux

Cook in the oven 2 hours and 15 minutes with the temperature at 66 degrees. Stuff the turkey, take out t he wish bone, put water in it first. When you take the wishbone make a wish, whoever gets the bigger half gets their wish. Don't forget the stuffing. Gently push it in, make sure you use the right recipe.
By S. Montileaux

You stuff it first, then cook a turkey in a oven for 1 hour 45 minutes. When it's done, lit it cool for awhile. Then when its done you can eat it. It's good even the smashed potatoes and corn.

By Tamyra Running Hawk

Take the plastic off and put it in the oven. The temperature should be 100 degrees. Set the time for 20 minutes. Check it every 5 minutes. Don't forget to stuff it.

An afternoon at Woksape Tipi Academic and public library

By Roseanna Renaud
Special to the Times

I spent several hours online reading up on Elizabeth Cook-Lynn before attending her author presentation at the Oglala Lakota College Library in Kyle on Friday, Nov. 16.

And nothing, as they say, prepared me for the real deal.

A peek at Cook-Lynn's bio reveals that she is a member of the Crow Creek tribe, born in Fort Thompson and raised on the reservation. She is Professor Emerita of English and Native American Studies at Eastern Washington University in Cheney, Washington.

She comes from a family of Lakota politicians - her father and grandfather served on the Crow Creek Sioux tribal council for many years and from Native scholars.

Her grandmother was a bilingual writer for early Christian-oriented newspapers at Sisseton, and a great-grandfather, Gabriel Renville, was a Native linguist instrumental in developing early Dacotah Language dictionaries.

Michelle May, Woksape Director, introduced Cook-Lynn as one of the founding scholars of Native American Studies, her writings reminiscent of Vine Deloria Jr.

And as if on cue, Cook-Lynn stepped to the podium and began reading a tribute to Vine from her 2007 Notebooks of Elizabeth Cook-Lynn, a collection of poems and musings, what she deems casual writings. Her soft words floated over the crowd and ever so gently pulled us in.

Much like televisions' Journeyman, who travels between this time and that, I found myself smack dab in the middle of Nov. 19, 2005, an aptly named Cook-Lynn piece about the day many came together at the Prairie Edge bookstore to pay tribute to Sioux intellectual Deloria "There has been only a handful of scholars in my lifetime who have changed the ways that Indians think of themselves after years of being told we were defeated and vanished."

Cook-Lynn then brought out a large extraordinary black and white historical photograph, 'U.S. Commissioners and Delegations of Sioux Chiefs visiting Washington D.C. Oct 15, 1888'. Each individual in the group was identified at the bottom of the photo.

Elizabeth Cook-Lynn

Cook-Lynn challenged us to think about why the image was important. It was two years after Sitting Bull was shot protesting the illegal allotment system, an emerging Ghost Dance, and the Crook Commission opened land to white settlement.

Cook-Lynn reminds us that no Chief in the photograph signed the land cessation agreement and that perhaps some in the library may be descendants of these Chiefs. "Nothing informs my writing more than this history" she said.

Elizabeth comments that the reservation based community college is "the best idea in 200 years." She moved on to her most recent book, New Indians,Old Wars, and declared, "I write about politics." She is not shy about tackling issues of colonialism or Indian nationalism and proclaims in her book that it is 'the sacred responsibility of every human being to work toward establishing harmony and social justice on earth.' She envisions the training obligation for all Indian Studies programs resting upon two principles, Sovereignty and Indigenousness. "This must encompass everything we do in Indian Studies".

Instead of luxuriating in the West's past glories or accepting the widespread historians' view of it as a shared place, Elizabeth Cook-Lynn argues that the American West should be fundamentally understood as stolen."

After the presentation, I overheard Elizabeth telling an audience member that she was retired from teaching and would never teach again. I reminded her that this was not so. She had just finished teaching us a thing or two. New Indians, Old Wars will make you think about what you thought you already knew. I know I did.

Roseanna Renaud, Oglala Lakota, retired to Martin after 25 years in law enforcement. She developed and taught 'Police and the American Indian Community' curriculum at the Dallas Police Academy and was a volunteer at the Urban Inter-Tribal Center of North Texas. She encouraged the DPD to recognize the American Indian Officer in a specific category instead of 'Other'.

Words of the 7th Generation

Good or bad: non-Indians in culture and ceremonies?

'The only thing that matters, is what we pass down to our children.'

We all have seen non-Natives participating in Native ceremonies and culture today. And while some support this for whatever reasons, I'm concerned and wondering is this really good for Native people or is it just leading to further injury?

Wanblii Ake Glii

Meaning is this just another obstacle that is inhibiting Native people from keeping their cultures alive and passing their languages on to their younger generations?

For myself in thinking about the difference between Native peoples who allow easy entry to non-Natives into their culture, and those who are more protective of it, I see that the Natives, who guard their ancestral ways, hold their language and culture more intact than those who don't guard it as well.

It seems to me that when non-Natives get involved in tribal ways, there are problems with passing the language and culture on to the young people.

I think this reality is a very elusive problem that negatively affects Natives everywhere, especially the ones that don't know much about their peoples' traditions.

And for me I would think when they see their culture seemingly up for grabs to any "wanna be Indian" who hungers for Native spirituality, they could interpret the ways of their ancestors as not having much value or importance to their people.

I would also think this would lead them to even further confusion when they know their people are concerned about keeping the language alive, but at the same time still allow non-Natives to participate in cultural ways.

Because I have never liked the fact that non-Native peoples can easily get involved in some Native cultures, particularly sacred ceremonies, I've often wondered, is there a connection to a people's cultural survival and growth in guarding their cultural ways or not?

The way I see it, keeping in mind Native peoples never had a problem before with passing their Native languages on until non-Native relations began to dilute tradition and promote division, my answer to that question would be, yes!

Ever since I've come to realize the importance of where my blood comes from I've been concerned about this seemingly hard to pin down problem among some Native peoples.

And I've been even more so concerned in recalling some of the stories I've heard from Native and non-Native peoples in the past few years about the Sun Dance.

I have heard everything from Hollywood stars dancing in the Black Hills, to little kids acting like proud roosters learning to dance from their older relatives who look like rodeo clowns parading around with flashy costume additions.

I've heard about people trying to pierce babies that can't even walk or talk yet and have seen "Sioux" sun dances advertised in southern Arizona which attracts picture happy tourists.

In the same state, but in the northern part, I heard a short story about a so called heyoka (Thunder dreamer) who felt up a woman during the water round, and then all the heyokas being angered by his actions, held him down and pierced his behind.

I've seen spirituality turned into "new age" bastard religions by non-Natives and my own people claiming to be "healers" either telling me their powers are authentic or they come from a range of other traditional practices.

And not forgetting to mention the many Natives who have retained the knowledge of their ancestors but would rather cater to non-Indians than their own people, while some feeling content in selling prayers, songs and ceremonies on the reservation, and off the reservation, and in other countries around the world all for money.

I've been on the Internet and have seen "authentic Native ceremonies" advertised for ridiculous amounts of money and have looked at books written by white men and women with made up "Indian" names about White Buffalo Calf Woman and other sacred spiritual matters.

I've read books by "tribal enrolled" authors telling every Native who reads his book that we as Natives must teach the white man how to treat the earth by welcoming all non-Natives with open arms into our ancestral ways.

And all the while I cannot forget that this is only the tip of the iceberg.

We as Native people coming from whatever tribe or band or nation, having very rich culture that goes a long way back in time, have attracted many non-Natives who want to get involved in our culture and pretend to be "Indian."

We as distinct peoples and nations cannot survive without a culture, which is our beliefs, principles and way of life through our customs, practices, and social behavior. If we continue to allow non-Natives to participate in our ways, our unique cultures will slowly become more watered down by outside "mainstream" influence as time goes by. What will our future hold for us then?

Culture is vital for societies to be healthy and language and tradition is what keeps the culture strong and holds it together.

And being that the future of Native people is in the hands of their youth I think those who allow the intrusion of non-Natives into their peoples' culture, need to ask and seriously listen to the opinions of their young people about this issue and other issues.

Because the only thing that matters in this physical world is what we are going to pass down to our children.

North Dakota's first meeting with Standing Rock vets on the logo

Dear Editor:

I'm absolutely amazed with how University of North Dakota's first meeting with Standing Rock tribal veterans group was conducted.

In the beginning of the meeting there was no set forum or agenda, and the floor was open for questions directed toward Native American students here at UND. In my eyes no respect was paid to the veterans and elders who attended the meeting. If Mr. Hodgson took some time and cultured himself to how we respect and honor our veterans and elders he would have a better understanding in how we communicate culturally in meetings.

One of the veterans stood up and said, " In our meetings we offer a prayer before we start" and he began to pray. This is a perfect example of how UND does not respect or honor us by using the logo.

The meeting was full of racism, harassment, and embarrassment testimonies that

Badlands boy

David Rooks

Last Sunday at 7 a.m. I met my Dad in front of his apartment. The rose hued dawn and still air spoke well of that November day. Good prospects. I had planned and waited some time for it. Dad's 85 now, and you never know.

Down to Oglala we hopped on the old fire road and made our way to Manderson. As with most elders it wasn't long and the old stories were percolating. By the time we crossed Cuny table and passed Cedar Butte we were knee-deep in Rez lore from the 1920s, 30s and 40s.

Just as I planned.

At Interior, the memory was a cattle drive. It was 1935 and Eugene Rooks, aka: Badlands Boy, was all of 13 years old. Looking across the White River I well imagined the scene. Longhorn cattle splashing across the brown water. Busy and near full sets of corrals near the railhead. I imagined, too, that 13 year old half asleep that night under late September stars, hearing the soft snorts of drowsy horses and the light tinkle of some piano playing in a yellow lit window off in the distance.

It was another time. After the cattle drive, pop took his summer wages and hitchhiked to Pine Ridge to boarding school. It took two days. He said he made pretty good time.

As for boarding schools, apparently he'd spent some time in just about all of them. From Rapid City Indian School to Oglala Community School to Holy Rosary Mission. Like many others, he also ran away from them a time or two.

At St. Francis, where he graduated high school, his stories were about the boxing team. Back then every school had one and the "manly art" was at least as popular as basketball. Hard to imagine, but true apparently.

As he spoke, a vivid picture materialized. In the old playroom at Holy Rosary big square plaster pillars held the ceiling up.

I saw ropes stretched across them to create a ring. Two skinny Lakota boys, dukes up, circling each other. All their dorm mates yelling for their fighter. A light smoke hanging in the air. Yep, like something from an old Cagney movie.

Different times.

By the time we neared Bear in the Lodge Creek near Wanblee it was early afternoon. Down along that creek, known mostly now as Bear Creek, is where Dad grew up. He grew a little quieter.

Try as we might, and kind of like old memories sometimes, there was no way in. Thanks to kind help from a longtime local rancher named Fogelsang, we were able to approach a bluff overlooking the location of his boyhood home.

It was his stepmother, Nellie Standing Bear's allotment, and Dad spoke lovingly of her. Down below, no buildings, not even an old trail came to sight.

After some time, we moved on.

There are many beautiful spots around Pine Ridge but few to match that one. Fashioned by time, rugged, various, timeless. Like the Lakota people themselves.

If you haven't done it yet, and there's still a chance, you might want to approach your Mom or Dad and say: "Hey, you want to go for a drive." You won't regret it.

David Rooks is an old mush eater, class of 1974. He lives near Hot Springs where he and his wife are raising their sxi kids. He also coaches the Hot Springs High School varsity soccer team. You can contact him at: lakinst@gwtc.net.

Notes From Indian Country

By Tim Giago

Thanksgiving was the only holiday they celebrated

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Rupert and Jeannette Costo, now both deceased, celebrated only one national holiday and that was Thanksgiving Day.

Rupert, a member of the Cahuilla Band of Indians of California, and Jeanette, an Eastern Cherokee, were the publishers of the Indian Historian Press of San Francisco, a publishing house dedicated to publishing authors of Native American heritage.

Both were historians of note when it came to the First Americans. They had researched all of the tales of how Thanksgiving came to be and dismissed these stories as so much rubbish. Growing up, Rupert had witnessed the unfolding of these untruths every year as the teachers told and retold the story of how Thanksgiving came to be. He witnessed the white children putting cardboard feathers in their hair, painting their faces, and trying to pretend they were Indians. To Rupert, it was an insult.

Jeanette was raised in the East and early on she realized that she felt uncomfortable with the school events leading up to Thanksgiving Day. Over dinner one year she said, "The other children knew that I was Indian and when they donned their Thanksgiving costumes they would circle around me making those 'whoooo, whoooo' sounds by cupping their hands over their mouths just like they had seen it done in the movies. To me it was not only disgusting but it was also frightening." She said that one time she went home in tears and asked her father why the kids were so cruel to Indians.

But Rupert and Jeannette both agreed that they had much to be thankful for. They had been together for more than 40 years. They had built a successful publishing house and at one time had published the only national Indian newspaper, Wassaja, in America. It was a monthly paper that distributed as many as 60,000 papers each month. They had also given many aspiring Indian authors a chance to see their works published.

And so they decided that Thanksgiving was the only holiday they would ever celebrate.

I met Rupert and Jeanette in the early 1970s we became friends. I handed them a shoebox full of poems I had written over the years and that is how the small book of poetry, The Aboriginal Sin, came to be.

The Costos always invited their published authors to their Thanksgiving dinners in San Francisco. I made it there almost every year in the late 1970s and 1980s. One year I took my daughter Denise, and another year my son Timmy, and one year my grandson Michael. One year my Cherokee friend and fellow journalist, Leta Rector, showed up for the day of festivities. It was a wonderful way to renew old friendships and to participate in deep and invigorating conversation.

The chef at the famous Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco always catered their Thanksgiving Day dinners. It was a day of feasting and the different dishes just kept on coming throughout the afternoon.

Jack Norton, the author of Genocide in Northern California, was always there and we became good friends. Adolph Dial, the author of The Only Land I Know, was there one year and he talked about the people of the Lumbee Nation, a tribe that has been fighting for federal recognition for more than 30 years.

Rupert died in 1989 and Jeanette held only a few more dinners after his death. She had a stroke in November of 2000, a stroke from which she never recovered. I flew out to San Francisco and sat at her bedside, but she was in a deep coma. She eventually returned to her beautiful home on Masonic Street to recuperate. She never did. She died in her sleep in April of 2001.

Every year at Thanksgiving time I get nostalgic and think about San Francisco and long to celebrate this one holiday with my friends and then I remember that they are both gone. I miss Rupert and Jeanette, the wonderful dinners, the good wine and above all, the conversation that flowed like the waters of Yosemite around that dinner table.

All of the books they published, their magazine "The Indian Historian" and their children's magazine, "The Wee Wish Tree," can be found at the University of California at Riverside. Rupert had a "Chair" named in his honor at UCR and the Costo Library at UCR is a wonderful place to do research for anyone interested in Indian history.

Rupert and Jeanette detested the myth of Pilgrims and Indians. They were thankful for their many friends and for the changes they brought to Indian country. I am thinking about following in their footsteps and hosting an annual Thanksgiving dinner for longtime literary friends and to pick up where Jeanette and Rupert left off. Maybe next year. Watch for my invitations.

(Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, was born, raised and educated on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard in the Class of 1991 and founder of The Lakota Times and Indian Country Today newspapers. UND logo controversy from page A4

The majority of Native American students were against the logo, with a few for the logo.

There is more to us then teepees and Indian tacos and if UND would take some time knowing who we are and where we came from and how we respect and honor our culture then this fight with the logo may have been over a long time ago.

We are Native Americans, but we come from different reservations and we are very different from one another, UND needs to quit trying to make one big pot of soup out of us.

I'm very much against the logo, but I'm more worried about other students and the effects that it has academically.

I know that the logo has totally taken over my educational goals here at UND. It is not fair that UND has not offered any service or focus groups to help us move forward. I came here not knowing anything about the logo and had no plans on wanting to know anything, but eventually fans and community members for the logo say derogatory and racist remarks toward my children and me and then you find yourself right in the middle.

I CANNOT WAIT THREE MORE YEARS, I will be dropping from UND and have no plans on coming back.

Partly because of the logo and the other part because UND doesn't have the Native American students as a priority during this 50 year fight on the logo. The debate on the logo is alive and breathing, people don't think anything is going on and that we are in the wrong. Every time the arising of court settlements or protest, things get worse for Native American students that are for and against the logo. Mr. Hodgson should be facilitating meetings with students and not just with Native American students; this is just not an Indian thing.

My advice to the tribes is that the University of North Dakota could not offer any monies to compensate for all the physical, emotional and spiritual distress they have bestowed on the Native American students for the past 50 years.

EVEN WHEN THE NON-INDIANS TOOK OUR LAND IT DIDN'T TAKE 5O YEARS!! THE FINANCIAL SUPPORTERS SHOULD TAKE A LOOK AT THE WASTE OF MONEY SPENT ON PROTECTING THE LOGO.

Little Giants complete end season 6-1

KYLE - The Little Giants of Kyle played in the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Child Care Midget Pee-Wee Football League that ran from late September to the first week of November. All the football teams played each other every Saturday in Pine Ridge.

The Kyle Giants Pee-Wee football team was coached by Brian Red Owl. Red Owl coached the 7 to 9-year olds and they had a good undefeated season, until the championship round of play-offs. Losing to the Pine Ridge Knights 8-6. The Giants ended the season with a record of a six wins and one lose. "These little players played very well and we are very proud of all of them," said Red Owl. "The parents and teammates of the Giants would like to thank Pigeon Jack and the staff of the OST Child Care for giving us the opportunity for an excellent and exciting season. This Little League Pee-wee Midget Football season has given the children confidence for any sport.

American Horse School administration selected for Turnaround Specialist Program

ALLEN - Bureau of Indian Education established a contract with the Virginia School Turnaround Specialist Program located at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville, Va.

The Virginia School Turnaround Specialist Program began at the University of Virginia to support and expand the professional training for school principals.

American Horse School administration Gloria J Coats-Kitsopoulos, principal/reading specialist; Jodi Richards, middle school team geader/Gear-Up coordinator and Josephine Brewer, primary team leader/Exceptional Education coordinator were selected by the BIA to receive this prestigious training held at the University of Virginia Darden Business School over two consecutive summers.

Instruction is delivered by Darden/Curry faculty members and select members in the field of turnaround management. The training includes best practices for business and education turnarounds, personal leadership, leading and sustaining transformations, communications and conflict, database decision-making and leveraging resources.

As part of the Virginia Governor's Education for a Lifetime initiative, the program teaches school administrators proven business management skills, places them in charge of persistently low-performing schools, and works with local divisions to give these new principals expanded power to help turn their school around.

The program focuses on leadership challenges, strategic change, decision making, communications, and partnering. It offers the opportunity for school administers to earn a professional credential in educational turnaround management.

Coats-Kitsopoulos, Richards and Brewer are committed to strategic, data-driven results- oriented academic curriculums and instruction. These administrators are able to demonstrate success at mobilizing resources and motivating people to elevate student achievement in a time compressed manner.

"Our education leaders need the support of a community effort to overcome adversity in many of our troubled schools," Warner said. VSTSP is designed to raise student achievement by focusing on the characteristics of high-performing organizations, personal leadership qualifications, turnaround leadership skills and the development of school turnaround plans.

To date, there have been four cohort sessions, the first cohort was administrators from the state of Virginia, the second was administrators from Philadelphia and Bowden County Florida schools, the third cohort was administrators from Chicago Public School System and the fourth cohort was attended by the administration staff from American Horse School, two BIE schools in North Dakota and the Louisiana Public School System.

Coats-Kitsopoulos, Richards and Brewer received one week of training in July of this year and will receive on-site coaching from the cadre of the VTSP during the 2007-08 school year, with additional sessions in January and July of 2008.

Norma Tibbitts, the Pine Ridge Education line officer, also attended the training with the AHS staff and will assist the AHS administration with the implementation program at the school.

Coats-Kitsopoulos said that the key to success of school improvement with the VTSP is parent support for their student's academic achievement. To successfully implement the VTSP at AHS all teachers must embrace focused lessons everyday in math and reading regardless of their specialty of instruction. South Dakota reading and math standards are at the center of each focused lesson and will be the priority of instruction for every grade and every class, every day.

Richards and Brewer as team leaders have the responsibility to insure that all teachers on their team are teaching the daily focused lessons plans in math and reading, to increase student academic achievement.

Pahin Sinte Owayawa celebrates Children's Book Week

PORCUPINE - Porcupine School celebrated Children's Book Week during the week of Nov. 12-16. The event, in its 88th year, is promoted by The Children's Book Council. The CBC encourages communities and schools to create their own unique celebrations. For more information go to: www.cbcbooks.org.

At Porcupine School, there were student book drawings for each classroom. There were also classroom library book drawings for each pod and a staff book drawing to promote interest in classic and newly released books. The emphasis was on enjoyment and relaxation of reading. The culminating event was a Book Week Party in the library featuring literacy themed treats, activity books, a read-aloud, stickers, and Charlotte's Web movie. The K-1 class won the drawing for the party. The events were coordinated by the Deanna Bissonette, librarian and Misty Clifford, literacy coach.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I sure enjoy reading your column and have done so for the past few years.

I hope you can help me with an answer to my son's issue. He abuses alcohol and has done so since he was very young. When he was 17 he was told by a doctor that his liver is damaged. That didn't stop his drinking. As of today, he served time for his second DUI and is currently in treatment. He has underlying issues that he can't seem to get over and says this is why he is drinking. I love my son and want him to get help before anything else happens to him. He is 22 years old.

When he started kindergarten he didn't like school at all. He wanted to stay home and help his grandfather with wood cutting etc., He didn't finish high school as he hung out with the wrong crowd. He dropped out of school in the 11th grade.

Don't get me wrong, he is a nice person, he's gentle with his nieces and other young children. He's a patient man, helpful to his grandmothers, but as soon as he has alcohol in his system, we see another side of him. I have five children and he seems to be the one that keeps me going and worries me more than the other four children.

He knows how to push my buttons, so to speak.

The questions I have are: what does his future look like, will he get his GED ? Find a job? What about his alcoholism?

I know when he returns from treatment, he'll still have all this negativity around him and it just may return to that same environment.

As a mother I want nothing but the best for him and would do anything within my reach to help him. Help!!!

Worried Sick

Dear Worried Sick:

Is there an Al Anon meeting anywhere around? It is not for the alcoholic, but for the people who love the alcoholic.

Your son is doing a pretty good job right now of keeping sober. You are right about his environment, and he does need to change friends.

All of that comes in time. He will, sometime within the next fifteen months or so, get his GED. He will go to a vocational school, probably in Rapid City.

He will struggle with alcohol off and on in his life for quite a while, but he is, at least, aware that he is not pleasant and that he disappoints everyone when he drinks.

It may take a while for him to live soberly, but he is right now on the right track.

Love him and do not allow him in your home if he drinks. Period. Other family members can also abide with this rule.

Do not make it easy for him, do not be an enabler. Just love him, and encourage him to be the true man he really is - thoughtful, loving, kind, gentle, respectful and kind. Eventually, mom, you will be proud of him. Good Luck!

Dear Anna:

I come from a large family. In the last year there have been many hard times. We have had two deaths, three cases of cancer, car wrecks with injuries, losses of jobs, children involved in the court system, alcoholism and its wildness, and every other kind of unhappy and stressful thing happening that anyone can imagine.

I have had a rough time with my work schedule and my own love life. I am constantly "blue" and don't feel very good. I have been diagnosed with a heart problem.

I don't think that God has cursed my family, but I wonder if you see an end to the bad stuff happening. I get depressed because it feels like nothing ever gets any better for very long.

Stressed out on the rez

Dear Stressed:

Life is filled with stress. Everyday challenges erupt around us. Challenges in our money, emotional, physical, work and family lives. It is how you deal with those challenges that determine the quality of your own life. Your own health becomes compromised when you are involved with stress as a lifestyle. I am not telling you that the death of loved ones isn't stressful, or that losing a job isn't stressful, or that questions in your personal love life are not stress full. I can, though, help you to adjust your perspective so that everything doesn't feel as stressful.

For example, when someone you love treats you coldly, you will develop a cold (or when you are criticized at work). When someone is speaking badly about you (gossiping), you will develop back pain.

Problems in communicating with people so that they understand will leave you with a sore throat. Cancer hits the body when the immune system is down - which happens when you are constantly in a state of worry or stress. We all carry cancer cells in our body. They take hold when we are "down." It is important to your health and quality of life to shift your perspective in order to reduce stress.

How do you do that? The most complete answer comes in one word: faith. Know that everything is in Divine Order. Know that other people's problems are part of their life journey and that they are often just stumbling blocks on the path to wisdom. Know that you create your own reality and draw to yourself that which you believe in the most. If you really know things are okay, then you will see that they are.

If you lose your job, know that it is the wrong job for you, and that another one is on the way that is better. If your relationship doesn't work out, know that the freedom that is presented to you is the best thing for you. Have faith that you are in charge of your life. If you don't trust yourself to take good care of yourself, see the evidence around you that you are taking good care of yourself and that you are qualified. The inability to accept your own ability to take good care results in control issues of others. This adds a lot of stress, since others will not be controlled.

Some great person said that "fear is the devil's wedge." It always creates radical response. When you are in fear, it works like a magnet, and fearful things happen. Shift your response to outside influence.

When something that is uncomfortable happens ask yourself how can this be in Divine Order? Then take the God perspective. See how your nephew's going to jail could be the best thing for all. Perhaps it will save his life. Perhaps it will influence others in a positive way. Perhaps it will keep him and his family members safe.

Everyone calls to themselves life challenges. When they happen, take a breath, release yourself from fear, and decide that you can cope, and you do have the patience to see how it works out in the long run.

If your job provides you with too much stress (unfulfillment), then begin to make a plan to change that. If you don't know how, then wait and see what opportunity God will provide you. Don't close doors on opportunities for change.

Live in the moment. This does not mean don't make a plan for the future, but it does mean to enjoy this moment NOW. Don't live in the misery of yesterday, or the possibilities of misery in the future. Breath now, be thankful now, enjoy the company you are in now, stay centered right now. This is the moment you have - live it fully.

Stress causes death. It opens the door to illness and depression. It takes you out of living and places you in the jeopardy of pain. In the 1950's when most women didn't work, all the men seemed to die of cancer and heart problems. A lot of men made it just to retirement - then they died. They were stressed out.

Nowadays, women have joined the workforce and the death force. They are stressed out.

By the way, I see you learning to cope. I see you adjusting to live in the moment. I see you having compassion for your relatives, but at the same time, knowing that their problems are part of their soul enriching journey.

I see you making a change in your work - not changing jobs, but leaving work at work when you go home and living in the moment in the evening with your family.

I see you finally coming to terms with the man you love and things working out.

These are all things that you are doing, by knowing that is the way they will work out. Faith dear one, Faith.

Let me tell thee, time is a very precious gift of God; So precious that it's only given to us moment by moment.
AMELIA BARR

The family of Sharon Lenora Bowman extends heartfelt gratitude and appreciation for all that offered prayers, words of encouragement, and support in the time of our grief and sorrow in her passing. We would like to say Thank You all for all the flowers, food, gifts, and support offered during the time of Sharon's wake and funeral services. We would like to thank the St. Ignatius Catholic Church of Wanblee with Fr. Rick Abert, SJ, all attending clergymen, as well as the pastoral team. A special thank you goes to Sharon's relatives and clan members from Ft. Berthold ND in attendance. Thank you to the Crazy Horse School in Wanblee for the use of the building. Great gratitude is extended to The Three Affiliated Tribes of Ft. Berthold ND for the monetary support, as well as the Eagle Nest District, the OST Housing and the OST Tribe. Thank you to all the Pall Bearers, Honorary Pall Bearers, Singers and Drum Groups. A special prayer of gratitude goes out to all in attendance. All those extended family and friends too numerous to mention that supported and helped us during this time, thank you for caring.

OST transportation finds temporary method to repair Allen road

ALLEN - "We found a small asphalt zipper that grinds up old pavement which allows you to grade and flatten out bad sections of a road in preparing it for compaction," said Jeff Whalen, OST Transportation director, "during a demonstration run of the machine, we were able today to flatten out the rutted areas that helped to cause an accident that took the life of a young infant recently."

Transportation has been meeting with officials from Bennett County and the State in strategizing a plan to fix the dangerous Allen road, a nine mile stretch of road that runs south of Allen to Highway 18. Whalen says they still have about $2.5 million designated for that road and Bennett County has $2 million. Whalen thought that it would take about $8 million to fix it.

"If we can get the preliminary engineering done, additional right of ways, we need 75 feet, last time they needed 33 feet and do some acquisition and make sure NEPA requirements are done, then we are looking at doing the road in the fall of 2008," said Whalen, "if any of those areas get held up it will push it back another year."

Transportation is looking at purchasing the asphalt zipper for $98,000 and were hoping to do it this week but the process was held up in the economic and business development committee. Finance has approved it now, it'll go to economic and business development committee on Friday and the executive board on Wednesday. Until then, the demonstration done on Wednesday will be it, the machine will be parked in the compound until the finances are worked out.

When the machine is purchased, work will include grinding up all of the trouble spots on the road, grading them out and compacting them. Next spring, transportation will be able to go out and mill the entire road, grade it out and put on

Please turn to Allen Road: A2

Left: The Asphalt Zipper is attached to a front end loader and recycles the material, then grades it and compacts it and the road can be ready in the same day. A process that used to take several days can now be quicker with the asphalt zipper. There is now a 40 mile an hour speed limit on the Allen road to slow down traffic. Currently there is only one sign on the south end of the road from Highway 18.

RST suicide task force to secure additional funds for suicide prevention

Law enforcement: 11 suicides and 294 attempts

By Archie B. Beauvais and Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Special to the Times

(Editor's note This is one of a series of articles on suicide awareness)

MISSION - Sicangu elder, Homer Whirlwind Soldier, of Grass Mountain community was emphatic in announcing that there have been more than 10 suicides within this year. Whirlwind Soldier was one of 16 participants who attended a life skills presentation by Ila McKay of the Kauffman and Associates of Spokane, Wash. on Tuesday evening at the Casey Family building. McKay was introduced by Cindy Young, director of the Rosebud tribal education department.

The Rosebud Sioux Tribe Suicide Task Force sponsored the presentation that included representatives from the Sicangu Owawaya Oti, RST Tribal Education Department, RST Lakota Language Preservation Project, St. Francis Indian School, Black Pipe Community, Sinte Gleska University and the Rosebud Indian Health Service.

The task force is also working on a large grant proposal from Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration that is due in January and given the proposed funding level request the task force will be able to undertake a comprehensive approach to suicide prevention.

McKay noted that the purpose of her visit was to finalize a prevention plan that had been written by the suicide task force. After reviewing the actions items, Kauffman and Associates, Inc. would be providing grant funding in the amount of $25,000 for the task force to hire a part time coordinator whose job it would be to coordinate any other initiatives.

Whirlwind Soldier said that he was in Colorado when he learned of the suicide of his grandson. As a result he is coordinating a concert in December at Todd County High School and St. Francis Indian School and will announce the details later. Part of the message he wants to put out there is that "The kids don't trust us because we don't listen…it is not an option to go to prison. It is not an option to kill one's self."

Many of the other attendees at the gathering have been involved with the RST Suicide Task Force since the beginning and some think that their efforts are finally gaining attention in Washington, D.C. Dr. Dan Foster of the Rosebud Indian Health Service has been on the front line of defense against suicide. His office has been swamped with clients and though he is not able to talk on the record, he announced that some additional funding may be on its way from Washington for use by the task force.

Employees of the Sicangu Owawaya Oti said that a recent suicide made the students very sad and they decided to hold a open forum at the SGU multipurpose building

Anpetu Luta Otipi extends services to Martin and LaCreek area

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

MARTIN - At the present time, Anpetu Luta Otipi offers outpatient services in Pine Ridge, Kyle, Wanblee and very soon in Martin; services include outpatient counseling, alcohol and drug evaluations, DUI classes, family services, referrals and support for after care.

"We are growing," said Terry Blue, ALO director, "we used to offer residential treatment for adolescents at our facility south east of Kyle in the No Flesh community, today we still offer the residential treatment for adolescents but we provide outpatient services to Native Americans of all ages across the reservation."

The new facility is being constructed by Donroy Ghost Bear Construction on main street in Martin. The construction should be done by mid December with additional interior work completed by late December. I think we should be ready for client services by the second week of January, according to Blue.

"We were approached by the tribe after a space became available in Martin, we met with city and county officials and found a local Indian contractor who would hire local workers and its going up really fast," said Blue.

The new facility will have a group counseling room, two to three counseling offices for individual assessments and evaluations and a reception area. Staff will include two counselors and a receptionist in the beginning with no more than four or five employees overall. Outpatient counseling for youth and adults will be available for Native Americans throughout the Martin and LaCreek area with DUI classes, assessments and evaluations and referrals will be available as well.

next Tuesday.

Foster said, "It's not what you do, it's who you are. We love life and that's contagious. Our children will show us what they want from us."

Jim Leader Charge, a family advocate for the RST Tribal Education Department said, "My dad, Fred Leader Charge told me that I would encounter "wonawizi" - jealous and envy. We have generations of dysfunction. How do we break that cycle? I have been alcohol and drug free for 11 years. You lead by example; kids are quick to pick up from adults."

McKay announced that a four day healing event would be held at SFIS on December 27-30. She said, "We are an advocate for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe to get more services from SAMSA. We are going to have a Gathering of Native Americans event and bring in the youth from all communities." The event would emphasize belonging and historical trauma and teaching children to define themselves. The agenda will also include a day on generosity and sharing.

McKay also illustrated a scenario on the Crow Creek reservation where the community was experiencing suicides. The students were tired of a long Christmas break and undertook a petition to reduce their break. After that, the suicides stopped. She said, "None of us are any better than any other. We all come from a place of pain and hurt."

Last week, Sen. Tim Johnson sent a letter to the Indian Health Service asking for additional help in combating the suicide epidemic and it remains to be seen exactly what that request might yield in terms of concrete assistance to Rosebud and Pine Ridge.

As for Nov. 28, staff at Johnson's office said they have not received a phone call nor a written response from Indian Health Service acting director Robert McSwain, who Sen. Johnson wrote on Nov 16. Johnson's inquiry requested more Commissioned Corps staff be sent to Rosebud.

"We have been made aware of the suicides at Pine Ridge and have answered a request for information on where to get initial assistance in their quest for a grant," said Julianne Fisher, Sen. Johnson's public relations director.

One of Johnson's questions to McSwain was how accurate is the data the IHS collects on suicide and why there is a disparity between that data and that which is collected by law enforcement?

Charles Red Crow at Rosebud Law Enforcement said since Jan 1, 2007 through Nov 28, there have been 11 completions and 294 attempts.

A healing event for adults in also being planned in the spring.

Suspended tribal council members reinstated with pay

Chief judge rules drug testing resolution to be struck down

PINE RIDGE - On Nov. 14, Oglala Sioux Tribe Chief Judge Lisa Adams ruled in a judgment order that tribal resolution 07-173 be struck down in its entirety for vagueness. She ordered the matter be remanded back to the OST council for reconsideration.

In October, the tribal council passed the resolution in question requiring members and other elected officials to take a "hair follicle" drug test.

According to the judgment order, the resolution was created, 'due to rumors of illegal drug use among members of the tribal government…" The rumors were sparked by the arrest of a council member in New Mexico for drug possession not drug use.

Adams earlier in the month upheld the test for council members but struck down the requirement for the tribe's treasurer.

Then on Nov. 7, a motion to rescind the drug-test requirement order failed by a vote of 12-2 of the tribal council.

According to a drug test document submitted from the tribal president's office, on Nov. 7, there were 11 council members, including the tribal president who submitted to a hair follicle test, two who refused on Oct. 22, because there was no resolution on it; and three who were tested in Rapid City; one who couldn't take the hair follicle because their hair was too short but then did the urinalysis; and five who did the urinalysis and one who couldn't take hair follicle as the machine broke.

Ron Duke, Pass Creek District, submitted his drug to Lakota Country Times for publication. The test was negative.

Garnier, didn't do the test and he remains suspended pending the outcome of charges against him.

On Nov. 7, six council members were suspended without pay by William 'Shorty' Brewer, vice president of the tribe until they complied with the drug testing resolution.

On Nov. 15, Steele sent a memo to council members and to the executive committee advising of the judgment order by Adams and requested them to comply with the order. He stated the council members were no longer suspended and to assume their rightful positions and were entitled to back pay for the time of suspension. He also scheduled a special session of the tribal council and requested all members be present.

an emulsifier as you compact it, it is too cold for that process to work now, according to Whalen.

On Nov. 15, a meeting was held between the Oglala Sioux Tribe department of transportation, the Bennett County Commissioners, the South Dakota Department of Transportation and the Federal Highway Commission to iron out jurisdictional issues and responsibility issues of fixing the Allen road.

The road has jurisdictional history and regardless of those issues, work will continue to repair the road until a new highway can be financed from Highway 18 to Allen. The road is currently used by school buses from several schools and people who work at Martin, Kyle, Allen and Pine Ridge.

Red Cloud wins All Nations, leads conference honors with eight

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

MISSION - Red Cloud finished 6-0 in the All Nations Conference on the way to a 7-2 season record, a conference championship and eight first team all conference awards. First team honors went to Billy Scott, running back/linebacker, Andrew Twiss/middle linebacker, Art Vitalis/wide receiver/corner back, Dave Giago/tight end/defensive end, Bobby Twiss/offensive guard/defensive end, Roman White Calf/middle linebacker, Christian McGhee/wide receiver/corner back and Ken Franks/outside linebacker.

Todd County was second in the conference with a 5-1 record and earned six first team awards including: Gunner Krogman/running back/linebacker, CJ Spotted Tail/quarterback/defensive back, Aaron Stoddard/fullback/linebacker, Jaden Allen/tight end/linebacker, Mike Neiss/wingback/defensive back and Canku One Star/running back/defensive back..

Little Wound-Crazy Horse placed five on the first team with Brice Hornbeck/wide receiver/cornerback, Kevin Hunter/running back, Trin In The Woods/quarterback, Arlin Cuny/center/defensive tackle and Jacey Mesteth/fullback/outside linebacker.

Michael Potter at running back and linebacker led Cheyenne Eagle Butte along with Spencer Peterson/running back/linebacker, Jackson Neigel/center/defensive back and Chase Pay Pay/defensive back.. Pine Ridge earned three first team honors including Joe Bissonette/tailback/middle linebacker, Sam Yellow Boy/offensive and defensive tackle and Ty Reddy/defensive end.

Larry Gayton Jr. anchored Crow Creek's team as a wide receiver/defensive back and Kalvin Kirkie at fullback. St. Francis earned two with Kevin Ford at offensive guard and Cory Staples at center.

Honorable mention honors went to Red Cloud's Jeremy Blacksmith, Cordero Tibbitts, Mike Cuny and Wade O'Bryan; Todd County's Noah Kilonzo, Raymond Wright and Josh Larson; Little Wound-Crazy Horse's Kory Young, Daylon Black Bull and Michael Pretty Voice Crane; Eagle Butte's Kyle Walters and Luke Farlee; Pine Ridge's Cody Trueblood and Elliot Brewer; Crow Creek's Sam Taylor and Tim Little Shield of St. Francis.

Three representatives of the All Nations Conference went to the SD football playoffs, Todd County and Little Wound in 11A and Red Cloud in 11B.

Todd County lost to Winner in a second round game.

Open House for the Pine Ridge Head Start facility Dec. 5

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College will be hosting an open house of the newly renovated Head Start and Early Head Start building in Pine Ridge on Dec. 5, from 3 to 6 p.m. The building is located on highway 87 behind Big Bat's.

Oglala Lakota College began operation of the Pine Ridge Head Start program in September of 2005. A grant from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Head Start Bureau was approved for OLC to operate the program. There are currently 10 head start buildings across the reservation with 26 classrooms and five early head start centers. The Pine Ridge Head Start program services at maximum capacity of 180 children.

The Pine Ridge building was dilapidated and needed major renovations. For many years this building was the Shannon County elementary school and later was used by the tribe for Head Start classes. $1.2 million from a Title III grant was used for the renovation of the building to make it a desirable and safe place for the Head Start and Early Head Start children.

"When we acquired the building there were a lot of facility deficiencies reported by the Office of Environmental Health. They required one sink per classroom and 18 toilets (10 children/toilet required). Before renovation there were a total of 6 toilets and 4 classrooms with no sinks.

The building was being heated with electric heaters and one boiler. The boiler system was removed and everything is now electric; the kitchen has state of the art equipment," stated Michelle Yankton, OLC's Director of the Head Start program. She stated, "We are pleased to report that the facilities are now up to code."

OLC's President, Thomas Shortbull stated, "In May of 2007 we graduated 183 head start children and that was a proud day for us. These children are our future leaders, they are our future OLC graduates, and it is our responsibility to keep them in a safe and structured learning environment." "We want to thank everyone who put their trust and their faith in us - OLC's Board of Trustees, members of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council, and especially the families of these children," Shortbull concluded.

For more information on the Head Start Program or the Open House you may contact Michelle Yankton, Program Director at 455-6117 or Ruth Cedar Face, Site Supervisor, in Pine Ridge at 867-1155.

Krogman, Hornbeck, Neiss earn All State honors

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

Gunner Krogman

Brice Hornbeck

ABERDEEN - Todd County's Gunner Krogman was well on his way to a super senior season to end his high school football career when he received a high ankle sprain in the St. Francis game. Krogman had been anchoring the Falcon defense and churning up the yards as a running back on offense. Gunner made it back in time to set the all-time rushing record for Todd County, breaking Andrew Schmaltz's record of 3,150 yards in the first round of the 11A playoffs against Little Wound and setting the final number of 3,245 in the second round playoff loss to Winner. Krogman actually earned first team All State honors as a linebacker as he finished the season with 91 tackles, two interceptions and two safeties.

"Gunner is probably the best athlete that I have had the opportunity to coach," said Bob Kornely, Todd County coach, "he just could see the field so well on both sides of the ball; he led our defense this year, he was our inspiration and on offense, he had the ability to take over a game."

Brice Hornbeck, Little Wound, earned honorable mention honors for his work this year as a defensive back and wide receiver. Little Wound has made the 11A football play-offs for the last three years and Hornbeck has been the key. If you get the ball anywhere near him on offense, he will grab it and on defense, Hornbeck is one of the hardest hitters in the game. He earned first team honors as a sophomore wide receiver.

"My goal this year was to get the ball into Brice's hands," said Darrel Hunter, Little Wound head coach, "obviously, we didn't get it done as much as we needed to."

Mike Neiss, a senior on the Todd County football team, also earned honorable mention honors this year. Mike was CJ Spotted Tail's big threat wide receiver, he ran back punts and kickoffs and also spent time as a running back and defensive back.

Tribe honors Swift Bird with proclamation

PINE RIDGE - On Nov. 21, John Yellow Bird Steele, proclaimed the day as Joseph Swift Bird Sr. Day in honor of his many accomplishments and contributions to the tribe.

Swift Bird died on Nov. 15 at the age of 86 at Pine Ridge. His funeral was Nov. 21 at Billy Mills Hall. His survivors include two sons, two daughters, 29 grandchildren and 53 great grandchildren.

The tribal proclamation states several of Swift Bird's accomplishments including: he was considered a traditional headsman and was a fluent speaker and a traditional dancer; he was a WWII veteran and served as tribal chief of police in the 1950s and participated in tribal affairs throughout his lifetime.

He was very knowledgeable in tribal history and was a valued storyteller. He was able to read the Lakota petroglyphs in the Black Hills.

He was an early activist for Indian rights during the Red Power movement in the 1960s and was one of four people to swim from a boat to Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Bay for the takeover of the Island.

In the 1980s, he served as co-chairman of the Grey Eagle Society.

The society was instrumental in land issues, stopping a corporation from establishing a gunnery range in the Hills. Another issue he was involved with was the negotiation of the climbing policy at Devil's Tower.

The society dedicated themselves to preserve culture, traditions and sovereignty.

Steele stated in his proclamation in recognizing Swift Bird, "for all his valuable lifetime and contributions to the Oglala Sioux Tribe in regards to tribal land claims and carrying on traditions, in which he played an instrumental part in preserving these rights for future generations."

Drug testing is a condition of employment for many

David Rooks

At first glance, mandatory drug testing for our elected tribal representatives seems reasonable enough. But, as with all things involving tribal politics, the waters get muddy pretty quick. Charges of unconstitutionality, invasion of privacy and involuntary exposure to criminal liability echo from the Red Cloud building to the OST Court House and back again. Each volley with a grain enough of truth to give one pause.

Which may, in the end, be the whole point. Scream loud enough and long enough, and pretty soon it all goes away. Toss in a few lines about sovereignty, state jurisdiction - what have you, and it's back to the status quo. Which, in this case, is: no mandatory drug testing for elected officials.

It strikes me that all this sound and fury is the sound of politicians protesting a little too much. The average Oglala in the street might be forgiven for being a little cynical. The question 'What are they hiding?' has been sarcastically thrown out more than a few times. It's a question that won't go away.

It must be noted that a number of our elected leaders have taken the test. So, too, there are legitimate concerns about safeguarding the rights of those required to take such tests. Still, in the end, it's a no brainer. If you want to be a leader, lead by example. Take the test. It's not like there is no drug problem on the reservation.

As a matter of tradition, this idea of public officials exempting themselves from rules that apply to others is certainly not cultural. Until recently, it was routine for members of the US Congress to remain above the laws they made for others. Buried under pounds of official verbiage would be a phrase that said none of the aforesaid applied to them. Now tribal government seems to have caught the fever.

This arrogance tends to spread into other areas. For example, the Congress routinely votes for automatic pay raises for its members. So, too, the Rapid City town council just voted for automatic pay raises for their members. Will the tribe follow?

The problem with the ruckus over drug testing is that it is even an issue to begin with. As a condition of employment, drug testing is required for many of our tribal members. Working with children or in law enforcement are just two examples that immediately spring to mind. We're not exactly inventing the wheel here. Tribal leadership requires sound and sober leaders.

Let's face it, whether you're drug free or not, no one enjoys the inevitable invasion of privacy for such testing. Some part of it is demeaning. These are sad times when just taking the word of someone that they are drug free is not enough. But, as anyone who has ever been caught up with the problem will testify, drug and alcohol abuse is a liar's disease. As a recovering addict and alcoholic, I know this to be true.

Our people need to know their tribal leaders are tackling this head on.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

Veteran's Day has come and gone. As the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan continue, soldiers and veterans are at an increased risk for a distressing and impairing mental health disorder called Post Traumatic Stress Disorder or PTSD. It is a condition where the war events are re-experienced in a person's mind and continue to affect the person. This can occur while they are still on active duty and when they return home and can last weeks, months, or years after the soldier is home. Signs and symptoms of PTSD may be nightmares, flashbacks, difficulty sleeping, hyper-vigilance, substance abuse,

When it comes to rumors, our reservation might be a Public Relations practitioner's paradise

By Ivan F. Starr
Oglala, S.D.

The other day I was looking through some books in my small collection. One caught my eye because it has some faded yellow "post-its" sticking out of the top and side. I opened the old textbook (Wilcox, Ault & Agee, Public Relations, HarperCollins Publishers, 1992) randomly and read some interesting facts about the problem of rumors.

For starters, the book defined a rumor as an unconfirmed piece of information; unverified by personal experience or a highly credible secondary source. It further stated that rumors are short-lived communication forms and difficult to isolate or measure and involve nearly every situation in our lives.

Although the book addressed greater society's rumor problem, I could easily see similarities on the homeland. Actually, I think the rumor situation defined in the book fit perfectly with our reservation lifestyle. When it comes to rumors, our reservation might be a Public Relations practitioner's paradise.

One of these parallels is that "informal conversations among peers and friends have a powerful impact on our thinking and influence our behavior more than TV commercials and editorials." In other words, rumors have a major impact on the formation of public opinion.

Although there are many definitions of Public Opinion, two seem to sum it all up: "…the sum of individual opinions on an issue affecting those individuals" and "…is a collection of views held by persons interested in the subject."

Another parallel is the book's presentation of reasons for spreading rumors: "…(1) they are advocates of conspiracy theories and distrust all institutions of society; (2) they feel victimized by a complex and uncaring society and have high anxiety; (3) they seek recognition from peers by claiming to have "inside" information and; (4) they find the rumor somewhat plausible."

On the homeland, we do have an overabundance of rumor spreading. A good portion of what I heard tends to ridicule and demean tribal government's credibility. Understandably, when solid information is lacking or incomplete, it creates uncertainty. Consequently, we have a large "rumor factory". This is because rumors are the only sources of information.

Perhaps the current tribal Public Relations (PR) Office needs to step-up its efforts to keep the tribal public informed with credible information. The textbook indicated that half-truths are simply an open invitation for more rumors and it destroys the integrity of official information and, in our situation, the governmental system.

I believe members of our tribal council are adversely affected by these rampant rumors. Rumors do tend to irritate and anger people, including public officials, and reacting under stress is not good. Inevitably, tribal public relations personnel must constantly pay attention to rumors and deal with them immediately.

The worst our tribal government can do is to ignore rumors because that only intensifies the situation. If the rumor is true, confirm it; if it is false, counter it with credible information.

Rumor spreading on our homeland has been in existence for a long time and therefore may be very difficult to deal with.

In addition, a formalized legislative procedure can help disseminate public information effectively.

People would be more amiable if they knew where a piece of legislation or law started, what steps it took, and when it became law. Such a procedure has to extend beyond the point where it becomes official with specific public dissemination procedures.

Here are some of the rumors I heard in the community, and I have heard plenty.

My intention is to inform our tribal PR personnel and elected officials so that they may be motivated into combating this debilitative stigma. After all, it is an honest firm way to get somebody on your side and because elections are coming up again.

A popular topic of discussion concerns our gaming operation, Prairie Wind Casino and Hotel. People want to know about net revenues. No one seems to know, me included, what the casino earned since it moved into the new facility. Tribal members deserve, in the least, a monthly accounting of gaming revenues.

Deadwood made an awesome public accounting of its revenues in the Rapid City Journal (Nov. 1, 2007 issue).

Of course, there are 114 gaming halls with an untold number of slot machines. The state and local government revenue cited ($15.2 million) from taxes and fees alone.

The article also stated total tax revenue since Deadwood gambling opened reached $175.8 million. Entities benefiting from this revenue are SD Gaming Commission, SD Tourism, State General Fund, Lawrence County, Deadwood and other towns in Lawrence County, School Districts, historical preservation projects, and SD of Human Services.

Although we have a mere 250 machines to speak of, I for one have not seen a public accounting of casino revenues. I don't believe this is restricted information. People are talking about what the total revenues are since 1994. Did revenues increase or decline since moving into the new casino? How much and where did it go for 2007?

Another popular and long-standing chitchat topic is that tribal government is not paying for their $20 million share of the $38 million loan from the Shakopee tribe; our casino is paying for all of it.

Personally, I believe a select few of our tribal officials know, yet, the majority of the tribal population is in the dark, thus we have mass speculation and uneasiness.

Another interesting rumor regards a recent alleged loan the Oglala Sioux Tribal government made directly from casino revenues to supplement their Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program. Such an action is a loan even if the tribe promised to pay it back with LIHEAP drawdown money.

If this were not a rumor, such action would certainly jeopardize the existence of the casino. I served on the tribal Gaming Commission for six years and learned enough to know that this is a violation of federal gaming regulatory laws and tribal gaming ordinances. Our casino, although classified as a financial institution, is not a bank according to Title 31 requirements.

Are we losing revenues?

Many tribal members are voicing this nagging question. For instance, this year's 13th anniversary celebration came and went without much ado. In the past, this event attracted large crowds; this year was hardly noticeable. I would like to see the "drop" for this event.

With customer patronage, we have revenue.

The Halloween promo was interesting. In all honesty, I have seen larger crowds at previous promos; however, this does not qualify the rumor as a true statement.

People are saying that someone trimmed the costume contest and canceled other activities to save money; thus, most of our goblins went to Rosebud's casino and competed for worthwhile prize money there.

The gaming industry is dynamic; it is lively and energetic. It is constantly evolving. In contrast to a tribal program, one must spend money to make money.

Above all else, it must be free of local political interference, which usually transforms into obstruction or hindrance of business protocols and, in some cases, a near breach of federal gaming laws and regulations.

Is there an end to this rumor spreading?

Is our government all those things people say it is?

Are we going to hear from our government?

Northern Perspectives

There is no one way to learn Lakota

If you examine the Lakota sound system and grammar, that alone appears quite intimidating. There are such things as stress and intonation, differences in speech between men and women, glottal stops and something called aspirated stops. Ben Black Bear of the Rosebud Educational Society has been studying some materials on grammar going back some 30 years and he mentioned the difficulty in mastering the linguistic structure of Lakota.

I am fortunate to be able to consult with Ben as he is an exceptional Lakota speaker who probably learned the language from elders who had a great command of the language. When I think of Lakota from a very structured and rigid perspective, I agree that it is the teachers of Lakota who need to be trained in the basic grammar for as we know, not everyone can teach it despite being a wonderful speaker themselves.

Apparently, being a teacher in any discipline takes a certain skill and desire to illustrate to others what knowledge lies just below the surface and that which will make our lives better. Today, we are struggling with a very sensitive issue of suicides on the northern plains and it is making us all very sad. Some say that creating pride in Lakota language, history and culture will help to make one resolute and determined to contribute to a way of life that was traditionally very sustainable.

The Institute for Indigenous Language Institute of Santa Fe, NM recommends the creation of a language team that will include the community and others who want to contribute to language revitalization. At Rosebud, we are beginning that process and will be offering a number of creative offerings in the community that will hopefully raise the consciousness about Lakota. We have a lot of wonderfully gifted Lakota speakers, yet, and we are going to harness that "cultural capital" and pass it on to the younger generation.

There probably is no one way to pass language on to the young, and that is where we can all help in one way or another. Whether it is done by the family, the school, by society or by media we all need to emphasize the importance of Lakota in any way possible. Kola, Francis Whitebird says that dictionaries are not what is important in language acquisition, but rather simply hearing Lakota and being able to retain the way words are pronounced is key.

There is no one way to learn Lakota and it is going to take a cooperative effort from each of us. There are many institutions who have labored for many years to instill Lakota language use and promote fluency and their work continues. Collectively, we are all searching for ways in which to teach Lakota and we are fortunate that Rosebud and Pine Ridge is committed to that objective.

Francis noted that there are other cultures which set aside a day like Saturday in which to teach their language and culture and if we had that kind of discipline it would be a wonderful place to begin.

There are also regional and community differences in the way some Lakota words are pronounced to include their meaning and that makes it all the more exciting when studying it.

For example, the word "ohan" has three different meanings depending on its usage and I will leave it to the reader to discover what those three are. We have also had fun with the name of the new coffee shop by the name of "Oti Wote."

Ben said it meant abandoned camp, while tahansi Victor Douville said it could mean a ranch style bunkhouse where people eat. Whatever the correct meaning, Ben said that "Owote ti" would be the correct way to mean a café or place where people eat.

Finding My Voice

The food challenge

Dana Badmilk

So the state food challenge went okay, I guess.

It was hard for me after awhile because my kids ate MY snacks and the chicken I bought got boring. Now that I KNOW my kids like tea biscuits and pretzels, I will certainly be buying them from now on since they are cheap. I know it can be done, but it's not very nice. Had it been at the end of the month, it would have been easier, because I am used to "roughing it," then, but not when everyone else is gorging on swiss steak and stuff, which I also had to cook.

I went for flavor with fresh veggies and as long as I had rice and chicken, I thought I would be cool.

I was cool, until day four when the tea didn't have the caffeine for me that I thought it would. And the raw sugar I bought didn't cut it either.

The chicken got old after day three so I only ate rice on day four, and I was thinking I should try out for Survivor with all the rice I eat anyway, but I lived on it last week. I bought oatmeal for breakfast and never ate it because I have a bad habit of NOT eating breakfast. It still sits unopened in my cupboard. So on day four, I was riding back from Singing Horse Trading Post with my auntie when she wanted to stop at Pinky's and get some M&M's. Not only did she want to stop there, but she wanted me to run in and get them. I didn't know they kept the candy behind the counter, so I walked around looking for it and everything in the aisles looked so good. I don't know how I ended up in front of the cooler, but I ended up buying an ice cold coca cola.

I opened it as soon as I got back in the van and for not drinking any coke, it tasted like the time I bought a bottle of Coke from a Mexican market because it had a cool shape. I drank that out of desperation for the need of caffiene and it was awful, just like that Mexican coke that day. So after about 4 drinks when it didn't get any better, I gave it to my son when I got home. I think it was just the fact that I didn't have the syrupy drink for a long time.

Day 5: I was doing ok, until I went to visit my auntie, who was making a plain bologna sandwich and I was watching her...then she pulled out some "gubment cheese" and put that on it and I was like...THAT"S IT! I threw in the towel, right then and there. It was the best bologna sandwich I had in my entire life.

I still ate the stuff I bought. But on Day 7, I was like I already cheated so lightning strike me if I couldn't do it. Ask me next week, I am sure I will already be doing it.

But just to show you what an expert shopper I am here is my list.

From Safeway with my Safeway Savings card I purchased the following:

Emeril's Asian Seasoning on clearance $ .94
Kedem Tea Biscuits .50
Family pack of Chicken Drumsticks 50 percent off w/card 3.30
Safeway brand plain yogurt .60
Total 5.34

I still have the tuna, the oatmeal and if anyone likes raw sugar email me.

And to my dad, I am ok and not in a coma. so on thanksgiving, I will have to make up for all that. I was happy to see the people that did participate, and how they realize how hard it is.

It is convenient to say I don't feel like cooking tonight, let's have pizza. But for some people that is not an option, it is a luxury. Even though many were scared of this challenge, I hope somehow they can see all they have to be thankful for.

Notes From Indian Country

By Tim Giago

Helen had a gift of gab

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Her obituary was just a small footnote in the Rapid City (SD) Journal last week. Writing obits used to be the first job of many aspiring journalists. In order to see if they could write with any sort of flair the editor assigned them to a desk and told them to write the obits of the unknown and the well known departed.

But like so many things that have changed in these days of high technology, the art of writing an obituary has diminished in many newspapers along with the many jobs that used to fill the desks in the newsroom. Writing an obit is still an art in many small Indian newspapers.

Her obit in the city daily never said it, but Helen Felix had many friends and in the field of selling newspaper advertising, she had no peer. Her sales capabilities were legendary in Indian country. She had that special gift of gab.

I first noticed Helen when I walked through the inserting department of my weekly newspaper, Indian Country Today, many years ago. She always greeted me in the Lakota language and I noticed that she always had everyone working around her in a state of laughter. She was working part time as a single mother to support her young family. Born and raised on the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota she had moved to Rapid City to get a job and ended up at Indian Country Today inserting flyers.

Her happy attitude rubbed off on everyone in the inserting department and it wasn't too long before I moved her into the advertising sales department. I had created a new insert that I called "Hitting the Pow Wow Circuit." It was going to be a tabloid that listed all of the Indian pow wows across America. I figured Helen would be the ideal person to kick off this new venture because she seemed to know everyone in Indian country. Although she had never been in sales in her life she took to selling for the pow wow tab like a duck to water.

Before I knew it, as the deadline for printing approached, "Hitting the Pow Wow Circuit" was 60 pages long and it was 75 percent advertising.

Ms. Felix had sold nearly all of that advertising and my creation, the pow wow tab, became an annual staple of Indian Country Today.

Helen met a fine man named Charlie Baca. He was an ex-marine that had seen some pretty tough action in Vietnam. She asked me if I would be her surrogate father and give her away at her wedding. I did her one better and we held her wedding in the newsroom of Indian Country Today. All of the staff of the newspaper plus most of her family was there to celebrate her special day. On that day she became Helen Felix Baca.

Every March Helen and Charlie would load up their van with our newspaper and special editions and they would head to the Denver March Pow Wow, the first big pow wow of the season. They would set up our booth and Charlie would wear his ball cap with Marine Corps logo and the Vietnam ribbons on the crown and between the two of them, they would sell many subscriptions and newspapers, enough to cover all of their expenses and they would bring back a profit for the newspaper.

Charlie became ill one day and after a visit to the VA Hospital at Fort Meade, SD, he was told that he had lung cancer. He blamed it on the Agent Orange that had covered his body on so many occasions in Vietnam. Charlie didn't make it. He died not long after his diagnosis.

He was the love of Helen's life and his death devastated her. It seemed to me that the cheerfulness had gone out of her life. I sold the newspaper in 1998 and the buyer, the Oneida Nation, terminated most of the employees and moved the paper to Verona, New York. Helen was one of the employees that lost her job.

Rapid City is not a very large town and I ran into Helen now and then. She was still struggling to support her growing children and she was suffering from diabetes, a disease that is epidemic in Indian country. She always gave me a warm embrace and spoke to me in Lakota. Her smile was still there, but just vaguely.

The disease finally claimed her life last week. She was only 54 years old.

I stopped by the funeral home at visitation time. She was lying in her casket with a pillow she always took to the Denver March Pow Wow. It was a pillow with the symbol of the United States Marine Corps embroidered on it. It was as if she had Charlie lying beside her.

PTSD in veterans

impulsive anger, depression, feeling emotionally numb and detached from society, exaggerated startle response, poor concentration, irritability, marital discord and drifting away from friends. The soldier may display one or more of the signs at any time.

The reality of war experience is brutal. We must not forget that our soldiers are experiencing extreme inhumane atrocities beyond our visual capacity.

Try to imagine washing the blood off a vehicle where only hours ago a buddy's vehicle was just blown up from an IED. Witnessing Iraq's innocent children and women being killed and maimed by their own people is devastating to a soldier. Body bagging is another tough job.

Most people are not knowledgeable that the military mental healthcare system is relatively deficient. On bases overseas mental healthcare can be quite adequate in some locations, yet severely lacking in other locations. Our government has been slow at taking action to help our soldiers while on deployment and upon return to the United States.

Over 100,000 soldiers are seeking mental health treatment through the Veteran's Administration with half specifically for PTSD. However, the VA's funds are insufficient. Recently, the Pentagon reported that key issues such as hiring more mental health caregivers and increasing coverage under the military's healthcare system could not be met until May of next year or later. In addition to not having adequate care, many of our soldiers refrain from seeking help because of the negative mental health stigma that society and military places upon them.

How can we help? First of all it does not matter if we are for or against the war. Writing or calling our Senators and Congressman can raise awareness of the mental healthcare systems shortfalls. When our loved ones return to civilian life we need to be vigilant to the signs of PTSD. Keep the lines of communication open and don't assume that everything is all right, especially when you see some of these signs and symptoms.

Let them know you will listen to them without judgment and encourage them to seek help. Upon returning home, the military will pay for an initial appointment with a therapist plus six more visits. You can advise them to apply for disability so they will have funds for continued mental healthcare. The most critical factor is to break the stigma that prevents our soldiers from asking for help.

Below are some websites you or your soldier can access that will give phone numbers to call both overseas and homeland or call 1-800-342-9647 for 24/7 help. The websites have information on PTSD. Or your can Google military PTSD and you will find news and other resources.

Educate yourself. It's up to us to push for change in military healthcare.

Lakota Vietnam veterans attend "The Wall" 25th memorial

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

Sicangu Lakota Vietnam veterans, Francis Whitebird and Bill Menard and Oglala Lakota Vietnam veteran, Guy Dull Knife were visitors at the Vietnam Veterans War Memorial in Washington, DC during the 25th anniversary ceremony held on Nov. 11.

ROSEBUD - On Veterans Day 2007, a 25th anniversary celebration of "The Wall" was held on the mall within site of the Washington monument. Sicangu Vietnam veterans, Francis Whitebird and Bill Menard and Oglala Vietnam veteran Guy Dull Knife of Kyle, made the long journey to participate in the parade and formal agenda. Jan Scruggs, founder and CEO of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund invited Whitebird to speak along with former U. S. Secretary of State, General Colin Powell.

Today, Vietnam veterans sell bumper stickers, tee shirts and other memorabilia of the Vietnam war adjacent to the Wall as they did in 1982.

Whitebird was unable to be there on time, however, the three were able to participate in the parade.

They were not able to connect with their former combat units in Vietnam, however, Menard found his brother Jack's unit and they marched behind them. According to Whitebird, Sen. Chuck Hagel of Nebraska was an original speaker at the dedication of the Wall in 1982 and he was present as well.

A continuous reading of the some 58,000 names on the Wall was initiated on November 7 and continued around the clock. Volunteers read the names day and night for four days.

Whitebird and Menard's trip was subsidized by the Rosebud Sioux tribe and the Oglala Sioux tribe assisted Dull Knife's trip.

When asked about the prospect of doing a Vietnam veterans celebration on the Rosebud, Whitebird said, "A Vietnam veterans gathering would be a healing. There is a need to collect stories so we know what war is about. War is lonesome, funny, terrifying and we develop lifelong friends with our squad, platoon and company. It affects people for life. They used to stand up and tell "waktegli" stories."

As a parent of two sons who are in Iraq, Whitebird knows the anxiety that is produced by the horrors of war.

Sons, Brandon and Colin are both in the infantry and have earned their prized combat infantry badges. Colin who will come home next Friday was wounded in Iraq and after recuperating he returned to complete his fifteen month tour of duty. Brandon has been in Iraq for three months and will most likely do another year.

Whitebird said, "I hope Colin won't be going back. It is too stressful. I did a lot of praying and a lot of ceremonies."

Both sons were reunited on Nov. 11 at their home in Pierre. Both grandfathers were in World War II.

Digital workshops for teachers of Native American students

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Department of Education's Teacher-to-Teacher Initiative, in collaboration with Office of Indian Education, is proud to announce the launch of the Digital Teacher Workshops for Teachers of Native American students. The workshops are designed to provide professional development opportunities for teachers of American Indians and Alaska Natives in all grade levels and content areas. The workshops support mastery of academic content and application by modeling strong teaching methods that have been successful in the classroom and providing a classroom application component, and additional resources.

These workshops are available FREE on the Internet at www.t2tweb.us/nativeamerican. The first workshops focus is on literature, community outreach, and reading.

One fatality result of car crash near Interior

INTERIOR - Paulette Pourier, 39, from Porcupine, died from an automobile accident near Interior on Saturday, Nov. 24, according to a news release from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The news release said preliminary information indicates the driver of the vehicle involved, a 1996 Mercury Marquis, failed to negotiate a curve and entered the ditch.

The vehicle rolled, ejecting the driver and front passenger. A man was transported to Rapid City Regional Hospital for treatment. Three juveniles were also riding in the vehicle but were not ejected, the release said.

The driver of the vehicle has not been identified.

Alcohol is believed to be a factor in the accident, which is still being investigated.

Treaty council files complaint against Steele

PINE RIDGE - On Nov. 21, the Oglala Delegation of the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council filed an impeachment complaint on Oglala Sioux Tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele with the Oglala Sioux Tribes secretary, Elizabeth Waters.

According to a press release by the treaty council, the offenses sited include charges that stem from Steele's actions and inactions in connection with the Native American Energy Group, a New York-based gas and oil mining company, said Floyd Hand of the treaty council.

He said the Treaty Council recently won a court case to have NAEG excluded from the Pine Ridge reservation after working for several months to develop a plan to explore for and mine uranium on the reservation.

Pine Ridge Reservation has been declared a nuclear-free zone by the treaty council and the tribal council.

"Steele must be held accountable for his actions. Our evidence will show that Steele was aware of NAEG's ultimate goal to mine uranium here and that he allowed them to come here to formulate a plan, with no regards to the irreparable harm that it would bring to our sacred water, land, air and people," said Hand in the release.

OLC seeks students for television production courses

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College's TV Production Program won the "Wilma Mankiller Media Education Award" from the Native Voice Film Festival on Nov. 12 for demonstrating innovation through their media production training and for the resulting inspiration, enthusiasm and outstanding work of the students.

The award came with a gift of a professional AVID editing software package, provided by the AVID Corporation. The award was presented at the annual conference of the National Congress of American Indians held in Denver, Colorado.

"We are very proud of the accomplishments of the students through Kathy Aplan's instruction," stated Marilyn Kockrow, chair of the Applied Science Department.

The award letter from the office of the Native Voice Film Festival included this statement, "The OLC Applied Science Department has demonstrated innovation through the implementation of Media Production training opportunities and the excellence of the program has been demonstrated through the resulting inspiration, enthusiasm and produced work of your students."

Earlier this year the program also received the 2007 State Director's Award from South Dakota's Office of Career and Technical Education in the Arts, AV Technology and Communications cluster.

The TV Production Program will be accepting new students for the Spring 2008 semester. Offered to students new to the program will be Live TV Production I, a six hour class that will teach students an introduction to the camera and camera techniques, lighting, audio, and an introduction to editing. OLC's TV Production Program offers the latest in digital video technology to educate students in the various aspects of Television Production to empower them to help shape their lives and those of the Lakota community through stories and images. Classes are held at Piya Wiconi, the administrative headquarters of Oglala Lakota College six miles southwest of Kyle.

Students have presented their work at various film festivals and other venues. The Vision Maker Film Festival presented by Native American Public Telecommunications held Nov. 16-29 has requested to show "War Ponies" created by students Jessie Short Bull and Brandon Ferguson.

The Museum of the American Indian will be playing "White Clay," a Thanksgiving video by Jesse Short Bull during Thanksgiving weekend.

For more information about the TV Production Program contact Kathy Aplan at 455-6122 or your local Oglala Lakota College center.

Huska honored

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I hope all is well with you. I am writing to seek your advice. My boyfriend and I all we do is fight and break up. On two occasions I caught him with another girl and I was so upset I was with someone else too. We are now doing okay but I'm unsure if I am pregnant and is it my boyfriends?

Also if it is a boy or girl? The guy that I was with someone else or has he been? Lately he takes off when he wants and I wonder what will happen in my future.

Tired of wondering

Dear Tired of Wondering:

Sometimes people just stay in a situation because they become "use to it." and they can't seem to break away into something better. When you truly examine your feelings about your boyfriend it won't take you long to figure out that the list of complaints about him does not add up to love.

He will never be able to measure up to what you truly want, and you will continually blame him for that. That equals chaos and trouble, trouble, everywhere.

It is difficult for me to ascertain whether you are pregnant right now or soon will be. I do see you as pregnant, but it might be soon and not right now. If there is a current pregnancy, then I feel that it will not hold.

If you are pregnant, then it is the other guys...and if you are just about to be pregnant, then it is still the other guys.

For your own sake girl please get some sense about yourself, your life, and your destiny. You are the one that writes the future for yourself. Change it now by losing the desperation for male attention and learn to wait for the right mate, instead of a choice of a man that is not ready for commitment, adulthood, or responsibility. Oh yeah, and one more thing, try to choose someone that is not substance addicted. It will make your life a whole lot easier and give any child you birth a much better chance at a good and stable life - which is the least you owe your children, both the already born and the ones to be born. Think about it. Children do not need to suffer, so don't place yourself in an insufferable environment.

Good luck. I hope my words do not offend you, but instead make you think enough to make the changes you need to make in your own life. Quit worrying how you will affect the men in your life, and consider instead how they might affect you and your children.

Dear Anna,

I am in writing in the hopes that I can have some questions answered. I am 25 years old and I have one child and I am finishing up with my last year of college. I wasn't suppose to tell my baby's father about me having his kid. But the pressure of everyone got to me so I told him.

But I had given our baby to some one else because my father wanted that. He said I will thank him later on down the road. I don't know where I'm going or what to do. I want to be with my baby's dad and everything it's just that everybody else says that he will kill me if I ever got him mad at me.

They say all this stuff about him but I don't really know maybe I am just turning a blind eye to him. They tell me to stay away from him yet when I did they were always hanging out with him. School is my first priority it always has been but I am 25 years away from being 50 and I would like to know if there is really a man out there for me that I can find who will be pleasing enough for my father because it seems all the guys I have ever tried to have a relationship with ended because they just weren't good enough and now I am starting to think that no one is. I try to have patience with everything but its just that I need feedback I hear my dad and what he has to say but I think it'll be better for me to hear it from some one else. Just wanting to know.

Wants to know

Dear Wants to know:

First of all, I am glad that you have enough of the Lakota values within you to listen to your father. Good for you.

I have to make one observation for you to consider:

How is it possible to have a good and healthy relationship with a man if he didn't even know you were pregnant? How much time have you spent with him? In any relationship that develops into a mate to mate situation, enough time must be spent together so that there are not any ugly surprises in store.

Your father has pretty good insight into this young man. He recognizes an uncontrollable temper when he sees it. He is only trying to protect you from making bad decisions, especially one that could cost you your life.

I know dear, how very much love it took for you to give up your child. You are blessed by all the angels that watch over children, for allowing this baby to have a good solid home with love and many blessings.

You are still very young. You have more than one relationship in your future. There will be three boyfriend situations before you find the husband relationship. Graduating will allow you to begin to make a good living, which will place you in environments where people that have it more together live and work. Healthy successful people with healthy self-esteem give you a very good chance at finding the right relationship.

Your father does not disapprove of everyone...he just knows a bum when he sees one. Be honest, who wants a guy that "hangs out" for a husband? He will always "hang out" while you "hang out" at work to support him and home so you don't piss him off. Use better sense, you have it - so please use it. Quit romanticizing men. Look at them the same way you would if they were on television. Use your neutral viewing skill to make honest assessments. And, please, once again, stay away from substance abusers - they have a tendency to pull you down and they will create an attractive opportunity for you to lose all of your values to join them in the activity of drinking, hanging out, and drugging.

You will be married by the time you are 29. He is a wonderful, kind, gentle man that wants babies, works, prays, and respects woman in general, you in particular, and believe it or not - he will like your dad, and your dad will like him.

Blessings girl, you are truly courageous. Be smart enough not to waste your time with the wrong man. The right man will be worth the wait.

Dear Anna,

I hope you are doing well and keeping warm this winter. I am writing because, I am riding on a very bumpy road, without a sense of direction. I'm not sure what to do with my life and I feel that I may be running out of gas. I am in school and doing my best, but it gets pretty hard sometimes. I am wondering if I should switch schools or if it would be best for me to stay with my current school? Will my family be happy and healthy? I always feel so lonely and I know it is early to start to worry, but will there ever be anyone for me? I also feel that sometimes the Creator may have abandoned me here. It so lonely and empty.

It always feels like I am missing something in my life and that I just can't put my finger on what it may be. Should I be doing something that I am not? Have I been doing something wrong or am I just not worthy? Lately, I have been having the strangest dreams about this, that I am unable to understand. Could you shed some light on that please? Also do you see any profession that I would be happy and successful at? Will I ever play for a college team? Will I get through this year academically, physically, mentally, and spiritually? I'm sorry for the numerous questions, but I really appreciate your response and guidance.

Thank you very much!

Looking for a road map.

Dear Looking:

Well dear one, the fact that you are looking is a good sign. The Creator did not leave you out of the love picture. You have really done the right thing by not getting involved with anyone that is not good for you. The right one will come along in about another one and one half to two years. I know that sounds like a long time, but actually it is perfect because it allows you time to figure out your life a little better.

Don't despair because you are undecided and don't quite feel like you know exactly what you are doing or where you are going. That is normal. When I find myself unsure of the direction I should go I pray to the Creator, Tunkshila, and God in any and all names known and unknown that I recognize the opportunity when He presents it to me. The rub about being a spirit clothed by a physical body is time. Everything takes it. We all want whatever we want, and we want it now. Good things always come, if you rest in the cradle of God's arms - which is what I call time.

Time is what God gave to the physical universe to distinguish it from Spirit. It is what we as humans feel and must go through when we are physical. It is God's gift to us, His promise, and our adventure. Learn to love and live in time. Lose your anxiousness and your inability to wait without aggravation. In today's world, the biggest problem that I can see is that the youth and even the adults want immediate gratification. They all want everything right how: the right mate, right now; the best job, right now; more money, right now; the wisdom of the ages, right now. That is one of the leading contributors to addictions of all kinds. People want to have it all right now - so they turn to something they will feel right now, sex, drugs, alcohol.

You will have a good life, and as a matter of fact, you have a good life right now. If you pray for thankfulness for this moment, for this day, for your present circumstances, God will hand you more to be grateful for. If you are disdainful of what He has given to you, then you will be handed less than you want. Remember, always Be Here Now, it is all you ever really have.

Yes, I think you should change schools. I believe you want a bigger challenge, a degree for a more recognized University, and a degree that is not offered at your present school. Social Services, counseling, behavioral sciences combined with sports will take you where you want to go. A counselor of youth and a coach.

Hang in there sweetheart, you are just tired. Time for Christmas break so you can recharge your batteries. We all look forward to a day or two off, and students definitely need a time "not to think so hard," so to speak.

I see good things for you. I see love for you. I see a good family life for you. I see a challenging and creative career for you. All in time.

In Loving Memory of Ryan Teague Janis
5-3-85 ~ 12-1-06

It's been a year since you left, but your memory is still fresh in our hearts. We said it before and we'll say it always, we'll never stop loving and missing you. With lots of love from your family who is always thinking of you up above,
Dad (Ron), Mom (Josie)
your sister and brothers,
Gina, Rob, Cyrus and your old faithful dog Legend.

Always in our Hearts,
We thought of you with love today,
But that was nothing new.
We thought about you yesterday and the day before that too.
In life we loved you dearly,
In death we love you still.
Our hearts will always hold a place,
no one will ever fill.
Our hearts still ache in sadness,
The silent tears still flow.
For what it meant to lose you,
No one will ever know,
We think of you in silence and often speak your name.
Now all we have are memories and your pictures in a frame.
Your memories are our keepsakes,
in which we will never part.
God has you in his keeping,
We have you in our hearts.

We, the family of Ryan Teague Janis, would like to invite family and friends to the unveiling of the headstone and memorial dinner to follow on Dec. 9, 2007 at 1:00 at Our Lady of Sorrows in Kyle

Principal Reports
October 2007

Valerie Charging Eagle K-2 Principal

Enrollment as of Oct. 31, 2007

Our total enrollment for grades K-2 was 165 students for the month of October. The breakdown of enrollment and average daily attendance and average daily membership is as follows: Average Daily Attendance: Kindergarten (53 students)-55.70, First Grade (60 students)-64.33, Second Grade (52 students)-52.31. Average Daily membership: Kindergarten-49.32, First Grade-58.36, Second Grade-49.05. Not only did our enrollment numbers go up from September but the ADA and ADM for each grade also went up. Our enrollment numbers, ADA and ADM fluctuate from month to month because of the enrollment and drops of students from Canglesska.

Professional Development

Some of the new teachers and student assistants who had never had the opportunity to observe a classroom in Spearfish before, went to Spearfish on Friday, Oct. 26. That session was beneficial to those who attended because we were finally able to see the "big picture and how all the components fit together.

Scheduling

The schedule has been established and implemented this month. It is working great and allows the teachers of each learning circle to meet at least one hour every week to discuss individual student progress, solve problems and make plans.

Wolakota After School program

By Edwina Brown Bull
Wolakota Director

Current enrollment for the Wolakota after shool program is 98. Highlights for the month of October were SDABBE presentation; Little Wound school board presentation Rapid City; presented and organized the Little Wound School Family Literacy Night; Oglala Sioux Tribe Gang Activities meeting at OLL Porcupine; organized Jane Goodall school visit.

Student and Activity Highlights

Were the Trick or Treat Trail and the Science Inquiry trip to Mammoth site and movies.

Parental Involvement

Included 100 percent involvement from Wolakota parents for students enrolled for fall, 2007.

The staff attended Black Hills Literacy Circle for staff development.

Program goals and objectives are to implement structured afterschool academic activities that will increase the students' ability to achieve state and local standards in Math.

Wolakota teachers met with regular classroom teachers to develop strategies and activities to enrich individual grades K-5 learning such as tomograms, adding, subtracting, multiplication, problem solving skills (math) and critical thinking (math).

Theresa Mendoza Elementary Principal Grades 3-5

The current elementary 3-5 enrollment is 150 for the month of October. The Average Daily Membership was 145.09 and the Average Daily Attendance Rates was 128.09.

The Behavior Incidents numbered 25 with males incidents at 21 and female incidents at 4.

School Security Report

Safe School Officer (SSO) continues to monitor the main entrance to the elementary, Visitor sign-in continues, SSO monitors bus loading zone, walks through campus regularly throughout the day, monitors the building every half-hour for unlocked doors, if unlocked secures, and a daily log is kept for documentation.

Student Highlights

Jason Shoots coordinator for the Pine Ridge Roots and Shoots program, came and gave students in third grade pen pal letters from Australia. Google Earth was used to locate where our pen pals live. When Jane Goodall was here, a bear was given to our class, which we named Mato, the class is sending them a bison and they in turn will give the bison a name. Royal Reader family was chosen, they came in for a special candle light dinner with their student. A special note from their student along with baby pictures, brought from home are hung on the bulletin board to celebrate the student and their family. The class also had a 94 year old grandmother from Wyoming visit the classroom, she showed the students how to knit and showed them a star quilt that she is making by hand.

Students in grade 3-3 learned about their bodies during health, how the five senses function. They then illustrated a diagram of the eyes, nose, throat, ears mouth and skin.

These students in fifth grade were excited and so pleased with their new classroom furniture that they wrote a thank-you card to me and I in turn asked them to thank the school board who approved the purchase of their new desks, book shelves and cabinets.

All three fifth grade classrooms held elections for their Student Council. This involved the entire election process including speeches, campaigning, voting, etc., students held elections for a president, vice-president, secretary and two representatives from each class.

Staff Development

Oct. 19- New staff attended the workshop held in Spearfish for Dominie training. Oct. 19- Selected staff attended workshop held in the auditorium titled 'Co-dependency' by Bob Olney from Catholic Social Services.

Assessments used in the classroom include; Renaissance Math, Renaissance Reading, textbook chapter test, and Dominie Reading/Language Arts assessments

In the counseling department Juanita Witt worked with students in grades K-2 on lessons on racism and grief counseling with three students.

Rochelle Middletent has worked with students in grades third to fifth on the following activities:

Oct. 8-12- "National Domestic Violence Awareness Month". Collaboration with Can'gleska Inc. to provide Domestic Violence Awareness to K-5 students.

Oct. 10- Domestic violence walk was held.

Oct. 22-26-Drug Free Week & Red Ribbon Week. Collaboration with outside agencies: Anpetu Luta Otipi, OST Public Safety, Western Prevention Resource Center to provide awareness among the K-5 students.

Red Ribbon t-shirts were presented to all students and staff in the K-5 department, the t-shirts were paid for by Anpetu Luta Otipi in the amount of $2,014.50.

Lakota Language and Culture

By Vina Yankton

Preparing the classes for the Christmas Program

3rd grade students worked on learning the Lakota numbers form 20-100. They also continue to work on everyday conversational words and phrases.

4th grade students are doing oral spelling of Lakota words. They also continue to do story telling.

5th grade students continue to work on everyday conversational words and phrases. They also do oral spelling on the new words learned.

All students are involved in story-telling and presenting oral reports for assessing their progress.

Parent/Teacher visits were as follows: 3rd grade-3 parents attended; 4th grade-14 parents attended; 5th grade-8 parents attended. I envision more parents attending parent-teacher conferences for Lakota Language and Culture as the awareness increases, this was the first time I had conferences so the turn out was small.

Parent Community Involvement Highlights

Oct. 17- Family Fun Night-we had a tremendous turn-out. Parent/Teacher Conference First Quarter attendance was as follows:
3-1 class-81 percent attendance,3-2 class-80 percent,3-3 Class-79 percent, 4-1 class-75 percent,4-2 class-69 percent, 4-3-class- 47 percent, 5-1 class-71 percent, 5-2 class- 72 percent, 5-3 class-100 percent.

Upcoming Activities for November

Lakota Speech Contest at Piya Wiconi on Nov 28.

Christmas program Theme: Christmas Around The World (each learning circle will represent a country) Practice has started in the K-5 grades

Custodians will be attending a "The Essentials of Custodial and Housekeeping Maintenance" workshop on Dec. 20 and 21 in Rapid City.

Christmas Stockings will be presented to grades K-5 on Dec 17 from the American Indian Relief Council.

Sport Events

By Denise Pourier

Oct. 9-Girls Basketball practices begin with 14 participating.

Oct. 25-First game of the season against Wounded Knee District School. Wounded Knee did not have a "C" team. We had enough "C" team players for two teams, so the teams played each other so that they could get some experience and playing time.

Oct. 27-we traveled to Red Cloud Indian School to participate in their Annual Pre-Season Tournament. The "C" team was 1-3 in the tournament..

Oct. 19-Tatuye Topa Dance Club was hosted by Red Cloud/OLL schools - Grand entry was 1 pm.

Consolidation School Reform activities included assessments, were completed for STAR Reading and Math; teacher evaluations are in progress; and Dominie assessments continue most are completed.

Tom Raymond Middle School Principal

Enrollment as of Oct. 30 is 142 students. The attendance of students is 83 percent and 93 percent for staff.

Parental contacts of the Principal was 26 with 399 contacts for Teachers and Other.

Lakota Language-The focus continues to be upon the acquisition and use of oral language with writing and cultural activities being used to enhance oral language. Students and our one teacher are working hard. One teacher resigned in the middle of October. The lack of a regular teacher or a regular substitute is not conducive to good learning.

Language Arts- Students and teachers continue to focus on learning to write memoirs and finishing a class novel. In addition they are working on writing stories. There is a focus on the elements of good literacy writing. A new program, Smart Words, has begun which seeks to improve student vocabulary and literacy development.

Mathematics- Students are working on fractions, decimals, and pre-algebra concepts. We lost a math teacher this month and our temporary regular substitute has been doing a good job; however, we need a teacher with strong mathematics background.

Science- Students and teachers are busy planning for the upcoming science fair. Students went on a field trip to the Rapid City Fire Department. Students have been studying the solar system. Students also investigated paranormal occurrences at the Middle School.

Social Studies-Students continue to learn about other world cultures and completed a thematic unit on Halloween. In addition students are learning about the colonization of the Americas and famous explorers.

Health, Physical Education and Recreation-The temporary regular substitute continues to do an outstanding job of working with students. All of our students have been training in Lakota Hand games and many are becoming very proficient. Other recreational health activities for enjoyment and healthful living such as a tobacco free life-style through the program, Teens Against Tobacco Use.

Three students were suspended with 12 students in conflict Resolution and 81 student referrals. Teachers, counselors, and other staff have been very busy working with students who are in need of assistance in working to solve the social problems that plague many of us at times, especially when we are growing up. Assisting the teachers and counselors have been school security, our school resource officer, the principal, our PE substitute, the attendance clerk, and our school secretary. Supporting and supportive parents have been the key to our success. Each day begins with Lakota song from our student drum group and smudging by Counselor Bim. Our new Dean of Students has begun working to support students, parents, and staff with behavioral issues.

Professional Development-Staff has participated in a variety of ongoing learning and training opportunities. Weekly staff meetings are held. Instructional Service Personnel have been working with our staff on a regular basis.

Grama's Prayer
Dear Lord,
today we pray for Grama's--
our own mothers, and Grama's everywhere, who have made such a major contribution to the good qualities we have, sometimes through genetics, more often through great effort and patience, and who have done their best to gently polish away our rough edges. Lord, please bless our Grama's for the endless hours of time they spent and the boundless energy they invested in us. Bless our Grama's for their sacrifices on our behalf as they often gave up or deferred their own dreams so that we could have ours. Bless our Grama's for always being there for us, for being the person we know we can turn to when we need comfort, encouragement, or just a hug. Bless our Grama's for making a home for us where we could feel safe, where we felt we belonged. Most of all, Lord, bless our Grama's for their unconditional love, for loving us no matter what, and for frequently showing love in ways that make us feel valued and cherished. Lord, please bless our Grama's mightily. Strengthen them, soothe them, wrap them in Your infinite love and shower them with blessings too numerous to count, too magnificent to describe.
We love them, admire them, respect them. and we wish that You would give them back many times the good they gave to us.
Amen.

Wolf Creek students save young girl from drowning

RAPID CITY - Three Wolf Creek ball players, in Rapid City for the Cougar Classic, walked into the pool at the Quality Inn on Saturday night and noticed a young girl lying on the bottom of the eight foot deep swimming pool. The three eighth graders hollered for help right away; Naomi Evans said she waited about three seconds before diving into the pool and grabbing the unconscious girl and pulling her to the surface. Corina Sitting Bear and Shawna Rowland helped Naomi pull the little girl out of the pool and lay her down.

A volunteer who happened by administered CPR to the young girl and eventually got her breathing again before the Fire and Rescue EMT's arrived to deliver Tiana Kuhluf to the hospital.

Wolf Creek students Corina Sitting Bear, Wolf Creek, Naomi Evans, Oglala and Shawna Rowland, Pine Ridge were honored Monday by Wolf Creek School and Shannon County Schools with certificates, a star quilt and Pendleton blankets.

Tiana Kohluf, a kindergarten student in Eagle Butte was released after spending one day in the hospital. Her grandmother called one of the girl's parents after she got out of the hospital and Tiana and her parents Dean Kohluf and Jodi Larson called Wolf Creek School on Tuesday and by speaker phone personally thanked Naomi, Corina and Shawna.

"So often you hear about all of the problems with our children," said Russell Budmayr, Wolf Creek School upper elementary principal, "when you have a story like our students saving a young girl it is not only heart warming but it helps balance all of our struggles."

On Monday, Wolf Creek School honored each of the students with a star quilt or Pendleton blanket and certificates of appreciation. Plans are being made to honor the three girls during the upcoming Lakota Nation Invitational tournament in Rapid City.

"None of these girls have sought out the limelight, in fact one of the girls has had dreams about what happened and during the honoring ceremony they all sat there and cried, it was so emotional," said Mike

Historic voting rights case settled

LAKE ANDES - In a historic agreement reached Dec. 4 with the American Civil Liberties Union, a South Dakota county has agreed to federal supervision of its elections through 2024. The settlement resolves a 2005 ACLU lawsuit charging Charles Mix County with discriminating against Native American voters in violation of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

"This is a landmark settlement," said Bryan Sells, a staff attorney with the ACLU's Voting Rights Project and the lead attorney on the case. "It will protect Native American voting rights in Charles Mix County for many years to come."

Under the settlement, approved Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Lawrence L. Piersol of Sioux Falls, the county is required to get approval from the federal government before implementing new voting laws in the county through 2024. The settlement also authorizes

Bennett County Nursing Home upgrades resident care

Facility listed on national list for improvement

By Roseanna Renaud
Special to the Times

MARTIN - Last week, Bennett County Nursing Home of Martin, was listed on a federal government list as one of 54 facilities in the nation that needed improvement.

Since then, Joe Caldwell, Bennett County Hospital and Nursing Home administrator and David Jones, nursing home board of directors, have evaluated public relations to account why the nursing home was on the list and improvements have occurred. The nursing home is currently in compliance with the regulations.

The list included two facilities in South Dakota, Bennett County and the Aberdeen Healthcare Center in Aberdeen and named for quality of care deficiencies.

Caldwell said the nursing home currently has 38 residents and are running at 85 percent capacity. Of the residents, 27 are Native American.

The Associated Press published the list nationwide and the article stated lawmakers and advocacy groups have been pushing the Bush administration to make it easier for consumers to identify poorly performing nursing homes.

Bennett County, one of 120 nursing homes nationwide is designated as a Special Focus Facilities by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. CMS began using the SFF designation some years ago to identify homes that merit more oversight and to stimulate improvements in their quality of care.

According to CMS, most nursing homes receive six to seven deficiencies per survey and correct their problems within a reasonable amount of time. The focus facilities may have a 'yo-yo' compliance history, showing improvement on one survey only to drop to substandard on the next.

SFF homes receive inspections every six months rather than annually. Being named to the list means the nursing home shows lack of improvement in a subsequent survey. A survey covers quality measures, nursing home staffing, and on-site inspection.

Health deficiencies deal with such issues as protecting residents from mistreatment, neglect or theft of personal property, ensuring that each resident's nutritional needs are met, providing activities to meet the needs of residents, making sure that the nursing home area is free of dangers that cause accidents, that there is a program to deal with mice, insects, or other pests, and developing a complete care plan within seven days of each resident's admission.

Enforcement actions range from civil monetary penalties (fines) or termination from Medicare and Medicaid. CMS mandates within about 18-24 months after a facility is identified by CMS as an SFF nursing home, it is expected there will be one of three possible outcomes:

1. The nursing home graduates from the SFF program because it has made significant improvements in quality of care - and those improvements are continued over time.

2. The nursing home is terminated from participation in the Medicare and Medicaid programs. While such a nursing may continue to operate (depending on State law), usually it will close once Medicare and Medicaid funding is discontinued. In such a case the State Medicaid Agency (and others) will assist all

High school girls basketball previews:

Pine Ridge, Red Cloud, Cheyenne Eagle Butte hope to build on last year's success

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

LAKOTA NATION - Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes had a magical season last year going 21-0 with a number one state ranking before losing to Bennett County in the District 14A championship game; Red Cloud turned their program around and used a mid-season six game win streak to launch their team through districts and regionals all the way to the State A tournament while Cheyenne Eagle Butte played steady all year and made it to state as well; all three teams have goals to improve on last year's successes. All three teams have the potential to go to state this year, the State A tournament is set for mid-March in Watertown.

Pine Ridge's Robin Webber, Cheyenne Eagle Butte's Brittany Azure and Jordyn Brown and Little Wound's Kelsey Brave Eagle are all playing college ball this year.

Pine Ridge, Little Wound, Red Cloud, Todd County, Crazy Horse and Cheyenne Eagle Butte all have new coaches.

Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes

"It's good to be back coaching but I miss coming home right after school and taking a nap," said Dusty LeBeau as he looks ahead to this season after stepping down as coach in 2004 to spend more time with wife, Tess who had been sick and who has since passed away, "my main goal is getting these girls into shape, keeping them in shape throughout the season and getting them to be comfortable with their roles and with playing a tough man to man defense."

No matter what happens this year, it will be an interesting year, Dusty's son, Jerome is now the head girl's coach at Red Cloud and his granddaughter, Tangerine is playing for Little Wound.

"It was really hard watching these girls lose the district championship last year, they were really sad and I thought if possible I could help them to improve on their finish last year," said Lebeau, "we have some really good girls and if we can stay together, play hard and work hard on defense, we'll do well."

Carlow, Lakota studies coordinator at the school,"we smudged them and talked about how positive their actions were, that their quick reaction time represented positive Lakota values and their involvement was a really positive thing."

All three girls participate on the Wolf Creek girl's basketball team and are looking forward to next week's Big Foot Conference A girl's tournament at American Horse School in Allen.

"What a wonderful Christmas present these young girls have give to this family," said long time Shannon County School board member, Todd O'Bryan, "I couldn't imagine how difficult the holiday season would be if they had lost that little girl forever; so many of us appreciate their quick thinking and action that saved Tiana."

federal election observers to monitor county elections through 2014 and requires the county to pay $110,000 in attorneys' fees and expenses.

The agreement stems from a dispute over the districts used in elections for county commissioners. In November 2001, the ACLU wrote to the county on behalf of the Yankton Sioux Tribe, complaining that the county's districts violated the one-person-one-vote principle of the Fourteenth Amendment and diluted Native American voting strength by splitting the Indian community into two districts. Although state law required the county to redraw districts in February 2002, the county commission voted to leave its then-current districts in place.

After further investigation, the ACLU brought a lawsuit on behalf of four tribal members.

Their complaint charged not only that the district boundaries were unlawful but also that the commission's decision to leave them in place was intentionally discriminatory. Judge Piersol ruled in July 2006 that the districts violated the Fourteenth Amendment but reserved ruling on the plaintiffs' other claims. Today's settlement resolves all remaining issues in the case.

"This settlement helps insure that the Native American voters of Charles Mix can fully participate in the political life of their county," said Jennifer Ring, Executive Director of the ACLU of the Dakotas. "Furthermore, it is another step forward on the road to full equality and healing of past wounds. That journey is long overdue and hard to undertake but it is possible and - as this case proves - well worth all the effort."

This is the second settlement reached by the ACLU involving allegations of voting discrimination against Native Americans in Charles Mix County.

In March 2003, the ACLU settled a lawsuit against the Wagner Community School District over an election system which allegedly diluted Native American voting strength in elections for the school board.

Under that agreement, the school district agreed to use an alternative system that resulted in greater Native American representation.

The case settled today, Blackmoon v. Charles Mix County, is one of seven lawsuits brought in federal court since 1999 by the ACLU on behalf of Native American voters in South Dakota. To date, all seven of these cases have been resolved in favor of the Native American plaintiffs.

Attorneys on this case are Sells of the ACLU's Voting Rights Project and cooperating attorney John Keller of Huron.

Pine Ridge opens on the road with a hard fought win over St. Francis

ST. FRANCIS - The Lady Warriors showed no fear Wednesday night against a taller and stronger Lady Thorpe team, St. Francis held a six point lead 24-18 in the first half but when the dust settled as the teams conbined for 37 turnovers in the first half, Pine Ridge was up 35-32 on the way to a 74-66 season opening win.

Lacey Weston was two assists short of a triple double finishing the night with 18 points, 10 rebounds and eight assists. Keisha Brewer, back from a knee injury this year, missed her first 11 shots but finished strong with 16 points, 11 rebounds, two blocked shots, three steals and two assists. Alliey Janis, a freshman had to step into her sister, Christian's role as point guard and although she struggled a bit with six turnovers ended the night on a positive note with 11 points, six steals, two assists and two rebounds. Saadia Tasso came off the bench for 17 points and two rebounds before fouling out with four minutes to go.

Marci Rodriguez, a sophomore, opened the season for St. Francis with a game high 19 points and eight rebounds; Kali Brave knocked down 14 points in the first half and dealt with foul trouble all second half fouling out with 5:59 to go in the fourth quarter.

nursing home residents to transition to another residence that can provide a better and acceptable quality of care. This may include a variety of possibilities, such as another nursing home, a community-based setting, or apartment with good support services.

3. The nursing home is provided with some additional time to continue in the SFF program because there has been very promising progress, such as the sale of the nursing home to another owner with a much better track record of providing quality care.

The Bennett County Nursing Home's report card on the CMS website at http://www.medicare.gov reveals three reporting periods listing 'Total number of Health Deficiencies' as well as other data relative to the surveys.

From July 1, 2004 to June 30, 2005, there were listed with 16 health deficiencies; from July 1, 2005 to June 30, 2006 with nine deficiencies; from July 1, 2006 to October 30, 2007 with 12 deficiencies.

Nationwide site inspections vary from state to state. What is a discrepancy in one state isn't always a discrepancy in another, or maybe doesn't carry the same weight or look-see during inspection. States often don't know what criteria the government are looking for when they peruse state information. Sometimes the most current data is not always current when it comes to bureaucracy and the World Wide Web.

The CMS website cautions "The State survey agencies are responsible for entering survey information into CMS' databases and providing updates as needed. Every attempt is made to assure the accuracy and timeliness of the information on the list. However, data lags of up to several months can occur between completion of a survey and posting of data on this list. We advise interpreting this information cautiously and supplementing it with information from the ombudsman's office, the State survey agency, or other sources."

In Bennett County's case the state survey agency is the South Dakota Department of Health in Pierre. Barb Buhler, South Dakota Department of Health information officer, said Bennett County Nursing home was "back in compliance."

She said that the department of health is more interested in working with facilities to assist them in meeting their guidelines and the SFF is a "federally mandated function and given how slowly their processes work," it takes awhile for information to come through.

She said not to be surprised if the Bennett County Nursing Home remains on the list, even though the facility is in compliance. The Department of Health is concerned with what specific criteria the federal government is looking for when reviewing the state's surveys of nursing homes. Even though the state conducts the surveys, it is the federal government who interpret the results.

Bob Stahl, a state Department of Health official, who works with health care facility licensing and certification, said that his office provides "technical assistance through the survey process" and there is good communication between the surveyors and Bennett County Nursing Home staff with regards to regulations.

Nursing home staff are encouraged to contact his office with regards to licensing and certification issues and the Bennett County Nursing Home is doing that.

Caldwell, who has been in his current position for about a year, said that since 2005, the Bennett County Nursing Home has operated separately from the county under a private 501C Board of Directors made up of members from the community.

A 501C non-profit corporation is an organization in which no profit may be used to the benefit of its members. Any profit is invested back into the facility. This does not preclude a non-profit corporation from making a profit, and in fact, most non-profit corporations are governed as if they are a business. The board's responsibility is to give guidance to nursing home administration on long term goals and objectives.

The current board of directors is David Jones, Doug O'Bryan, Dale McDonnell, Brad Otte, and Rolf Kraft.

Caldwell explained that the 12 health deficiencies are not mistreatment deficiencies. "The surveyors find an issue, and then they must find a regulation to attach to it. Sometimes the connection seems a little obscure and often they find one issue and attach three or four regulations. So you often have one issue that results in three or four deficiencies."

One deficiency dealt with a resident who had stepped outside the front door of the facility for approximately three minutes. He said now there is now an alarm system that alerts staff. Another with the use of bed side rails. Another citation was an empty milk crate sitting on the floor awaiting pick-up by the milk man.

Jones encourages the public to come to the nursing home and visit. "We want to encourage people to come to the nursing home and visit with residents and find out for themselves," he said. "My mother was in there for 10 months and I wouldn't have moved her to any other facility. The staff is very compassionate and caring. We want to make sure that the public knows that we have nothing to hide and will be up front," he said.

The facility is supported by the community and is needed, said Jones. "Good things will come out of this, we have corrected them and will move on," he said.

Caldwell said, "We've certainly had our issues in the past, but this year we have completely revamped our quality assurance plans as well as beefed up current staffing." He said they have spent an additional $75,000 this year on adequate staffing. There is an average of 120 staff for both the nursing home and the hospital, which are adjoining facilities.

Jones said they are fortunate with Oglala Lakota College's nursing program, it has helped the community.

Both men want the community to know that when surveyors conducted a 'revisit' to the Bennett County Nursing Home in November 2007, all discrepancies were corrected and there were no additional discrepancies. This information is not listed on the CMS site.

Nursing staff who are Lakota speakers as well as culturally relative décor and activities such as Lakota Chapel allow residents to remain connected to their communities.

Caldwell said a positive aspect to the care of the residents is the staff.

One resident, who had previously been in a Rapid City nursing home but didn't care for it, said of the Bennett County Nursing Home, "it's just like home.

Everyone here is nice and not prejudiced. Some of the nurses speak Lakota." Another resident remarked that the food was good and he was recieving good care.

year will be Lacey Weston, a 5'11" junior, Keisha Brewer, a 5'11" senior, Sophia Janis, 5'6" junior, Aimee Pond, 5'5" senior and Alliey Janis a 5'6" freshman. Coming off the bench will be Saadia Tasso, 6'1" junior, Shaina LaysBad 6'0" senior, Delia Big Boy, 5'6" sophomore, Sioux Dawn Janis, 5'5" sophomore, Amber Twiss, 5'5" freshman and Cheyenne Ten Fingers, 5'8 junior.

Pine Ridge is missing Robin Webber who is playing at Brown Mackie College in Salina, Kan. and Christian Janis who is on the team but is having a baby and is looking to play in January.

Pine Ridge is the defending Lakota Nation champ and is the number one seed for this year's tournament and yes there is truth to the rumor that Dusty and Jerome will both wear a tie if they reach the LNI championship game together.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte Lady Braves

Alissa Kingfisher Benoist, a CEB graduate who played two years of college ball at Williston State has moved into the head coaching job following her year as an assistant last year.

"We have a young, athletic and very up-tempo ballclub, I'm really looking forward to their season," said Benoist, "we lost Brittany Azure and Jordyn Brown to Williston State but we have a number of young players who have state tournament experience, we are looking to go back to state and to improve each day."

Starting for the Lady Braves are Nadia Watt, 5'8" sophomore, Lacy Leaf, 5'8"sophomore, Jessica Keckler, 5'9" junior, Tiara Maxon a 5'8 junior transfer from McLaughlin and Cesi Allen, 5'4" sophomore. Coming off the bench will be Scottie Laundreaux, Mariah Cook, Marisa Laundreaux, Harlee Morgan, Tonia White Bull, Allysa White Bull, Lindee Lawrence, Jazmin Phillips and Leona Benoist.

"We need to get better on the defensive side of the ball and we need to do a better job rebounding, Azure's graduation leaves a big hole," said Benoist, "when I played here, girl's basketball was a joke, we didn't get much support, today we have a large following, it's exciting.

Red Cloud Lady Crusaders

After two disappointing years, Red Cloud turned the program around last year, won District 15A over Custer, knocked off St. Thomas More in regions and went to State. Jerome LeBeau was hired as the new head girl's basketball coach in October and brings a strong family basketball tradition to the program.

"All along, I felt that someday I would coach, I wanted to start where I started, here at Red Cloud," said new head coach, Jerome LeBeau, "there was an opening and I decided the time was good; I'm really looking forward to the year, we have two outstanding seniors, Ida Clark and Lisa Bear Robe and a young experienced supporting crew.

Red Cloud has been working hard in getting into shape and working on defense.

"When we started, I told the girls, if you want a banner to go on the wall here, you need to play solid defense, man to man, and you need to be in shape," said LeBeau, "we also have one of the best players in the state in Marque Lunderman, she has the ability to play any position on the floor, but don't get me wrong, this is not a one player team, its going to take a solid effort by everyone on the team to get there, I started to coach with the goal of winning, not just winning but winning it all."

Red Cloud will start Desirae Blacksmith at the point, Marque Lunderman at the two guard, Shaina Clifford at the three, Ida Clark at four and Lisa Bear Robe at five. Kristy Boltz, Casara Pine and Saige Pourier will be the first three off the bench. Red Cloud is the number three seed in the LNI and opens the season at Little Wound on Dec. 6.

Editor's NoteNext week Lakota Country Times will publish the remainder of the girl's previews and the boy's previews.

Canadian Court to rule Thursday on AIM slaying appeal

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - A Canadian man charged with killing American Indian Movement activist Anna Mae Pictou Aquash in 1975 should learn Thursday if he has one more chance to appeal.

John Graham, a Yukon native, is fighting extradition to the United States to stand trial for the slaying of Aquash on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

The Supreme Court of Canada will announce Thursday whether it will hear the case, said Chris Girouard, spokesman with the Department of Justice in Ottawa.

If the panel denies Graham's appeal request, he could be extradited to South Dakota as early next year. If Graham is allowed to appeal to the Supreme Court, the case likely would continue for another year, prosecutor Deborah Strachan has said.

Graham was taken into custody in June after a Vancouver, British Columbia, judge denied his appeal of an order that he be sent to the United States to stand trial.

Graham has said he's innocent.

A Canadian judge ruled in 2005 that Graham should be extradited and the Canadian minister of justice affirmed that decision last year.

Nelson honored by OST for work with NASA

By Roseanna Renaud
Special to the Times

PINE RIDGE - Many years ago young Ike Nelson got caught drawing pictures of airplanes during class at Holy Rosary Mission, now Red Cloud Indian School. Ike wanted to be a fighter pilot, so he put his vision of flight to paper. A teacher told Ike that he was not smart enough to fly planes.

Today, he is an Air Force veteran, who served multiple tours in Viet Nam and is now retired from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration as an engineer. He received the highest public service award by NASA to non-NASA employees. He was also recognized for the Silver Snoopy Award, recognizing outstanding performance. He currently lives in California.

Nelson was honored last Friday, Nov. 30 by his family and community.

In his speech at his honoring, Nelson said the consequence for his inattention in class often involved being locked in a room filled with books. Nelson turned punishment into opportunity by reading what was on the shelves.

"In these books I could travel anywhere in the world," he said. He listened to a more encouraging teacher who "instilled in me the thirst for knowledge." Nelson showed them all. After his tours in Viet Nam he went on to work an entry level position with North American Aviation and retired as a team director for the International Space Station.

Billy Mills Hall, decked out in cheery holiday lights and bursting with well-wishers became a place of special honoring for Nelson. Standing next to a table laden with Nelson's many awards, his cousin William White Eyes of Pine Ridge said, "We had no idea what he did. He never talked about it. We knew he worked for NASA and traveled between Florida and California." Nelson said "I'm a very private person. I'm not used to this. Usually when I come home, I spend time with my Dad, Tommy Nelson.

Oglala Tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele told the crowd, "It is important to honor and remember our tribal members for their accomplishments so that our children can look to this man and say…I can do that," said John Steele, president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, in speaking to the children, elders, and community members who were present.

Following the honoring, Oglala Sioux Tribe Academic and Individual Achievement Awards were presented to students.

Raytheon Corporation Project Engineer Alan Nakagawa, who labeled himself Nelson's 'sidekick,' told the crowd about a very special 2005 honor from the NASA Astronauts themselves, the 'Silver Snoopy Award,' given '…in appreciation for professionalism, dedication, and outstanding support that greatly enhanced space flight safety and mission success.'

With a colorful video of his career highlights as a backdrop, Nelson stood humbly before his community and said that 'luck' was one word that best described the realization of his dream and of course it was about scribbling pencil drawings of aircraft during school on a long, cold Pine Ridge afternoon.

SFIS board to be installed a later date

ROSEBUD - On Thursday, Nov. 28 the Rosebud Sioux tribal council passed a motion to install the new St. Francis Indian school board at a later date when the finger print portion of their background investigations is completed by an independent contractor. The regularly scheduled board of education meeting for November was also postponed until December.

The RST Tribal Education Review Board is currently charged with the responsibility of governing SFIS until the new school board is officially installed.

Any questions about this public service announcement may be directed to the Office of the RST president or the RST Tribal Education Department.

A special board training was held on Saturday, Dec. 1 and 2 at the SFIS high school with the purpose of establishing an official protocol for the two boards to continue to work together for the next year.

LWS places top in Lakota language contest

KYLE - Little Wound Elementary received the first place trophy for overall participation points in the 5th annual OLC Lakota Language Speech Contest held Wednesday, Dec. 5. LWS has received this award for three consecutive years. The students who participated are shown above: Trenton Old Horse, Joshua Iron Shell, Jaeda Brown, Ellishiann Last Horse, Ty Apple, Isabelle Bull Bear, Ramone McBride, Arianna Red. The Lakota Language teachers are: Vina Yankton and Iris Gay. .

Tribe honors academic and individual achievement

PINE RIDGE - Talk about a grand combination. The Oglala Sioux Tribe Education Department and family members of NASA Engineer James C. 'Ike' Nelson thought it would be a good idea to combine a special honoring for Nelson with the annual presentation of student awards. The awardees were able to hear from a man who came from the same schools that they were now attending and learn that books and dreams do go hand in hand.

Wanda Two Bulls, member of the education/honoring Committee, said that there were 600 awards for academic achievement and outstanding participation as well as awards for elders and community members.

Two Bulls related a personal experience about a student who was having a difficult time in school. When the student learned she was on the 'President's List' for academic achievement, she told Two Bulls that she had been thinking about quitting. Receiving the award changed the student's mind and gave her courage to go on.

It is stories like these that speak to the heart of educators everywhere.

The Education/Honoring Committee members were OST Education Department Interim Director Christopher Bordeaux, Sheryl Her Many Horses, Carole O'Rourke, Kevin Steele, Crystal Eagle Elk, Rocky Dubray, Warren Eagle, and Wanda Two Bulls.

OST council votes not to hear compliant on impeachment against Steele

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux Tribal Council has decided not to impeach tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele and has dismissed all allegations against him.

A Black Hills treaty council had accused Yellow Bird Steele of meeting with an energy company to explore uranium mining on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Both the treaty and tribal councils have declared the reservation a nuclear-free zone.

A representative of the reservation says the meeting was set up to conduct a water study on the reservation and that's when rumors started.

Both the treaty and tribal councils have declared the reservation a nuclear-free zone.

James Ferguson Little Wound School boxing club member champion

KYLE - On Dec. 1 and 2, the Silver Gloves State Boxing Tournament was held in Sioux Falls. James Ferguson of Little Wound High School in Kyle, Defeated Shawn Rupert out of Lead-Deadwood,. Ferguson now advances to the Silver Gloves Regional Tournament in January '08.

Letters to the Editor

Acknowledge of Janice Richards

Dear Editor:

The following letter was submitted by Ron "Beef" Randall about Janice Richards. He said in this case Janice is a Lakota person first and that reflects being humble, not speaking of her accomplishments or what she does for her community.

Dear Janice,

I am writing this letter on behalf of Gerald One Feather and the rest of the board of trustees to commend you for the Thanksgiving dinner hosted by the staff of the Pahin Sinte College Center. Gerald made the request at the board of trustees meeting that you be commended as director of the college center and for your involvement of community activities, and they were all in agreement.

Gerald reported that he was pleased with the dinner and the opportunity for the community to gather and visit with each other, the students and the staff. You show pride and committment to the college, the students and to your community.

Sincerely,
Thomas Short Bull
President, Oglala Lakota College

Finding My Voice

By Dana Lonehill

Tales from youth

Dana Badmilk

When I was in fourth grade and my brother was in second grade, we lived about 12 miles from here out in the country.

My step dad was usually always home, being that there were no jobs for geologists here. One day I remember him telling me that he and my mom were going to the city so be sure to catch the bus to Grandma's house.

I forgot. I was so absorbed in solving my Rubik's cube on the bus that it totally escaped my mind, until we walked all the way up our drive and the door was locked. Then I remembered we were to take the bus to Grandma's house in town

Travis was mad at me, we tried all three doors, looked in windows and I knocked and cried as if to wake the ghost in the house to come open the door.

That's when I saw the tracks.

Travis looked at them and confirmed it - coyotes. Yes, Dana they are indeed coyotes.

Hungry coyotes in the winter.

I sat in the snow defeated and howled like a coyote. I would just give in and let them tear me limb from limb.

It was getting dark fast and we had to do something.

"Let's go to the road and hitchhike." My seven year old brother said, taking charge.

I knew all the dangers of hitchhiking, heard the stories, knew it was taboo, but it was either take our chances of being picked up by a killer or let the coyotes have us. Besides, it couldn't be that hard, you just stand by the road and stick your thumb out, right?

Travis was already standing there with his thumb sticking out, but I had to do it my way. I jumped in front of the first car that went by, waving my arms all over and screamed. I gave them no choice, they had to stop. It was a young family with a baby, not likely the serial killers I imagined, but I still didn't trust and kept my eye on the baby just in case he tried to kill us.

They drove us to my grandma's house where I continued to cry.

My grandma asked why I was crying. I was over dramatic and a drama queen and it was my fault we went home instead of to grandma's...but no, I had to be evil and get my mom in trouble.

"She-she-she is gonna spank me for hitchhiking!" I sputtered.

"She better not spank you, or you can live with me! I'll spank her!" MY grandma was instantly mad at my mom.

I smiled while sniffling away my tears, knowing I wasn't in trouble.

When my mom came to get us, my grandma told her the whole big dramatic scene and accused my mom of spanking me and child abuse. My mom looked upset, embarrassed and gave me that LOOK.

I ended up spending the night with my grandma that night, just because of that LOOK. I knew for sure if she wasn't going to spank me for hitchhiking,, she would surely do it now for the accusation.

Now I see how overly dramatic my daughter is and I know she got it from me, and I know I deserve it. She is the one my mom used to say "I hope you have a kid just like you!" when I was 13 and had a whole bag of chips on my shoulder.

I don't mean to be a drama queen, I think I just feel things more than anyone else, like my daughter.

But if my princess EVER hitchhiked, I would spank her.

Disclaimer: This story from my childhood was not meant to encourage hitchhiking, spanking, or drama.

OST dismisses complaint, votes to move forward on $3.4 million bond

By Natalie Hand
Special to the Times

In a special session on Monday, Oglala Sioux Tribal Council voted 15 for, 1 against, and 1 abstaining to dismiss the impeachment complaint brought against Oglala Sioux Tribe President John Yellow Bird Steele.

The complaint, filed by the Oglala Delegation of the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council, charged Steele for working with Native American Energy Group, a New York based gas/oil/mining company, who was pitching a fraudulent proposal to prospective investors to mine uranium on the Pine Ridge Reservation. Further, the complaint charged that Steele authorized former OST Vice President Eileen Janis to work with NAEG to develop plans, while she was under indictment for embezzling from the tribe.

"We are not surprised by the tribal council's action. We presented a legitimate charge against Steele. Obviously, he has a long reach with this particular tribal council. The treaty council commends Rep. Jake Little, council representative for White Clay district, for standing with the Treaty elders and the oyate," stated Floyd Hand, interpreter and delegate of the treaty council.

Respected treaty elder, Marie Randall stated, "I was contacted by a council representative for advice. I told her that the Council should not be surprised by the complaint against Steele. It has been coming for a long time now. He doesn't respect the Treaty. Steele and the IRA Council always push the treaty elders aside. They take what they want from the table without looking around to see if anyone else is hungry."

"I was the only (tribal) council member to vote against dismissing the impeachment complaint. I was shocked to see almost all of the other Council rep's vote to dismiss the complaint", said Little, White Clay District).

Rep. Garfield Little Dog, (Wounded Knee District) stated, "I felt that I had to abstain from voting on the impeachment complaint, as John is my close relative. I was surprised by the council's actions. But the judiciary committee will be filing charges on Eileen Janis for impersonating an elected official."

Little Dog indicated that another key issue discussed in this week's session was the approval to proceed with a $3.4 million bond proposal for OST Solid Waste. The measure passed narrowly. "We tried to table the issue, as it was brought directly from John's (Steele) office and did not go through proper committees. But our motion to table it was denied. I'm against more debt," said Little Dog.

As expected, suspended Rep. Don "Gummer" Garnier, of Pine Ridge District, facing impeachment, resigned amidst charges of drug possession and trafficking in New Mexico. The OST Council voted 15 for, 2 against, to accept his resignation and give him back-pay. "Jake Little and I were the only ones to vote against back-pay for Garnier. Why does he deserve back-pay?" said Little Dog.

The OST council will reconvene on Wednesday, Dec. 5 at the tribal council chambers in Pine Ridge Village.

Pte San Win's final instruction went something like this- listen carefully.

"Whenever you put this sacred language that the Creator gave you on paper you will cease to be a Nation." The Oyate should take heed to this warning. This is a great resurgerlee of medicine men on the Pine Ridge Reservation but, there is still no cure for the terrible plagues that are upon our people.

Suicide prevention funding

The prospect of losing a child to suicide is such a terrible tragedy and it is occurring on the Rosebud reservation as I write this. Some say it has reached epidemic proportions and many agencies and individuals are scrambling to find a solution. Whether help comes in the form of additional counselors through the Indian Health Service or additional grant funding from any number of agencies it will be a welcome addition to what we have now.

There are many separate initiatives to fund raise and generate money in the name of suicide prevention related activities and such efforts need to be coordinated so that it benefits those who need it the most. Such funding should not be consumed by administrative overhead or indirect cost contributions, but rather given to counselors who work directly with those identified most at risk.

Our suicide task force is fully operational and holding regular meetings to address this scourge that is breaking the hearts of all of us parents. Every time I hear that a young person has been lost to

By Tim Giago

Three courageous Native women newspaper publishers

The Lakota Times was the only independently owned Indian weekly newspaper in America in 1981. Now there are several. Ironically, the three most read, most influential of these independent newspapers are owned and published by Indian women.

Elizabeth Gray started the Oklahoma Indian Times in 1995. Several years later, as the paper expanded beyond Oklahoma, she changed its name to Native American Times. She said, "I started the newspaper in a storage facility in Afton, Oklahoma. Next door to our office was a fish bait room and the smell of fish filled our little office."

Why did she start the newspaper? "It all starts with vision. What goal or mark you focus on is how you will create the path to accomplishment. If it is handed to you then it is someone else's creation. It has to start with you. In this business you have to be hardheaded and not listen to the visions of failures of others. Indian tribes need newspapers so they can have a balance in their governmental structure," Liz said.

"I believe it is my job while on this earth to be a vessel of truth while supporting the community of people through my newspaper as a communication source. It really isn't my newspaper; it is the people's because without truth, we have nothing," she said.

Native American Times can be found online at nativetimes.com. The online edition compliments the hardcopy newspaper that is published weekly.

Amanda Takes War Bonnett, an Oglala Lakota, had a comfortable job as Communications Coordinator at Little Wound School in Kyle on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. Prior to that she had worked for me at the Lakota Times and at Indian Country Today. She started as a part-time janitor while attending Oglala Lakota College. She eventually worked in every department within the newspaper. Her insight, knowledge of the Lakota culture, and her ambition soon landed her the job of managing editor. She was with me for 14 years.

She gave up that "comfy" job in 2004 and started a weekly newspaper she named after the original Lakota Times. Not long after the paper started she got a threatening letter from the lawyers of the Oneida Nation in New York State, a tribe that had purchased Indian Country Today in 1998. The letter advised her that if she did not change the name of her newspaper they would sue her. It seems the Oneida believed they had prior rights to the name Lakota Times by virtue of the purchase agreement.

She felt she could win the case if she pursued it, but with little money to fight it, she went ahead and changed the name of the newspaper to Lakota Country Times. The Oneida haven't challenged that name as yet.

Amanda believes in maintaining the ties to her culture and traditions while still reporting the news that is important to the Lakota people. "Our communities are hurting from alcoholism, a lack of spirituality and a very poor economy and so many other social ills and so giving the people things to read that will help in their lives is very important," Takes War Bonnett said.

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Her website is lakotacountrytimes.com and it also compliments her hardcopy, weekly newspaper.

Avis Little Eagle is a member of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe. She came to work for me at the Lakota Times fresh out of college in 1990. She started out as a news reporter and eventually became my managing editor. One day I assigned her the task of doing a series on fake medicine men and women. She took the story to heart and spent many nights and weekends working on what turned out to be a ten-part series.

During the run of the series Avis and the newspaper itself received threats of hell and damnation, death threats and threats of evil spells from some of the fake medicine men and women the series exposed. Little Eagle sat down one Wednesday to write the final part of the series. She worked on it all morning and then took a lunch break. While she was out of the office her computer suddenly started on fire. We immediately put out the fire, salvaged her work, and transferred it to an identical computer never telling her about this disaster. She completed the series and it became one of the major accomplishments in Indian journalism.

Little Eagle started the Teton Times in McLaughlin, SD in 2002. Avis was one of the fiercest defenders of freedom of the press and she was determined to see that the people of the Standing Rock Reservation have a newspaper that would bring them sources of knowledge that would give them the variety of opinions needed to make sound political decisions.

Avis could have been speaking for Liz and Amanda when she said," The mainstream media does not understand our culture and traditions and can never report adequately the things that we can better report about our own condition and beliefs." Little Eagle ran for public office and in 2005 she became the first woman ever elected to serve as vice president or as it is now known, vice chairwoman, of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe.

These three strong Indian women have made a difference in Indian country. Their newspapers, unlike newspapers owned by the tribal governments, have an open-mindedness that allows dissenters to publish letters and articles critical of tribal government and even letters critical of their own newspapers and of themselves and whether they like you or don't or whether they agree with your opinions or not, they never deny you the right to express yourselves on the pages of their newspapers.

This you will never find in newspapers owned by the tribal governments or in many cases, in the mainstream media.

He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard in the Class of 1991 and founder of The Lakota Times and Indian Country Today newspapers. He founded and was the first president of the Native American Journalists Association. He became the first Native American ever inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame on November 10, 2007. He can be reached at najournalist @msn.com) suicide, I have to pause and catch my breath. After all, one of the cornerstones of Lakota thought is that our children are sacred. Wakanyeja ki wakanpi.

Suicide prevention

It is an issue that we used to think happened in other communities, not ours. We used to wonder what solutions were implemented in order to address the suicides we kept hearing about in other Native communities and now it is our turn to come up with answers.

Whether we take a holistic approach to addressing generational oppression or confronting the pressure of today's contemporary society the answer seems to lie in everyone doing whatever they can to raise the level of awareness as to what signs to look for and where to go for help.

The issue is such a sensitive and baffling problem that it is difficult to find anyone who will offer any official suicide data, however, most of us who live here have a sense of the seriousness of the epidemic.

We lost two young people in just the last week and though life must go on, we should all pause and think about the circumstances which may have led them to make such a drastic decision. The final moment in which one chooses to end their life has to be such a profound moment and one which we need to understand so that proper intervention can be implemented.

We need to applaud the efforts of Dr. Dan Foster of the Indian Health Service who along with Mike and his other colleagues have been laboring overtime to provide individual help. There are countless others who are helping in the sweat lodge, in healing ceremonies and by simply talking to young people.

Others have plans to re-energize young people by emphasizing the importance of Lakota language, history and culture as a way to remind youngsters that being grounded in the Lakota wicoun or way of life is not consistent with suicide.

Whatever we choose to do to help curb this very sad epidemic we need to do it now and do it together as the clock is ticking and we cannot afford to lose a single youngster to a premature death.

Day of healing held at Eagle Butte Campus, others encouraged to host event

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

EAGLE BUTTE - Emmanuel Red Bear, a veteran Lakota studies instructor has been advocating for the acquisition and maintenance of Lakota language, history and culture for years and this past fall was no different. As an adjunct professor at the Oglala Lakota College branch campus teaching Lakota History and Culture, Red Bear recently lectured to his students about the issue of historical trauma and the resulting loss which it has inflicted upon Lakota people.

Red Bear has taught high school and college for many years and as a fluent Lakota speaker, he has also taught in the Lakota language summer immersion camps held by the former Si Tanka University on the banks for the Cheyenne River.

Red Bear challenged his students to put their interest in historical trauma into reality and they responded in very proactive way by planning a "Day of Healing." The ideas arrived at some ideas to promote such a healing experience and came up with the idea of inviting inspirational speakers from Haskell.

The group also decided that the format would only include a Lakota ceremony without any Christian influences as the boarding schools have often been cited having a negative impact in the lives of generations of young people who were sent to the boarding school.

The boarding schools have often been cited having a negative impact in the lives of generations of young people who were sent to the boarding school.

Medicine men and healers were invited to the Day of Healing and more than 100 people attended and this validated the need for such successful student led experiences. The day began with Lakota prayers and the making of tobacco ties. A talking circle was held and was made up of teenagers and elders as well as a "Wiping of the Tears" or ista mni bakintapi for those who were in need of such support.

A counselor was on hand to reassure the participants that confidentiality, trust and hope would be observed as they were able to talk freely about their issues.

Red Bear noted that the students prepared a very delicious meal at the end of the day and this was followed by a purification ceremony in the sacred sweat lodge. He was especially appreciate for the initiative that the students demonstrated in his Lakota history and culture class and is looking forward to challenging his students in the near future.

The students from Red Bear's Lakota history and culture class have issued a challenge to other programs, tribal communities and classes to host such a Day of Healing for their surrounding community as the practical experience of taking something from the classroom and implementing it appeared to be a great learning experience.

Todd County High School 'locked down' due to gun call

MISSION - On Wednesday, Nov. 29, parents arriving on the Todd County High School campus at 3:30 p.m. to pick up their children were surprised at the prospect of seeing several Rosebud Law Enforcement Services vehicles parked at both entrances of the school. No one was allowed to enter the building.

A student apparently was observed at the school with a handgun and school officials were quick to report it to authorities. The incident came to some kind of resolution and conclusion as students were released at approximately 3:45 p.m. The next morning a school resource officer was heard on the public address system explaining the incident to students after a thorough search of their belongings was conducted.

On Nov. 29, TCHS principal, Victoria Sherman, sent a letter to parents explaining the security threat and the procedure that the school will subsequently follow should a threat be detected again in the future. She explained that once the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services took control of the school they immediately placed the school on "lock down" status. All students and staff were accounted for according to the letter and all were required to stay behind locked doors away from the windows.

Sherman also explained that a similar procedure would be adhered to in the future.

No student or staff member would be allowed to use the phone or email and that no information would be released to parents.

This is to ensure the confidentiality of the incident which might be in progress and any conversation regarding the incident could be construed as impeding a police investigation.

Sherman also noted that the safety of the TCHS students was of foremost concern and that they were safe from eminent harm.

Finally, she commended all of the students for their patience and understanding during the stressful situation.

OLC hosts open house Dec. 14 for student dorm

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College is pleased to announce the Open House of the new student dormitory in Pine Ridge on Dec. 14 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. The building is located behind the Pine Ridge College Center on the northwest corner of the Pine Ridge School campus.

The dorm will provide housing to college students in the community of Pine Ridge. The complex contains six efficiency and six one-bedroom furnished apartments. The Pine Ridge College Center is the second largest center of Oglala Lakota College with more than 250 students registered for the fall 2007 semester.

"We are pleased that so many students choose to stay on the Pine Ridge Reservation to receive their degrees and

An open house will be held at the newly built dorm at Pine Ridge.

I am especially pleased that we can now offer at least 12 students housing." stated Shirley Brewer, Director of the Pine Ridge College Center. "Many of our students live in homes with multiple families and these apartments will offer them the solitude needed to study," Brewer went on to say.

OLC is appreciative of the Title III Department of Education for providing the funding for the building of this facility.

President of OLC, Thomas Shortbull, said, "These dorms were a long time in the making and we are looking forward to having them fully occupied by our students." "The shortage of housing has been a problem on the reservation for too long and we are pleased that Oglala Lakota College can be a part of the solution," said Shortbull.

For more information on the Pine Ridge College Center Open House for the student dorms or any questions on the application process for student housing you may contact Shirley Brewer, Center Director for PRCC, or Chrysan Smallwood, Counselor/Dorm Manager, at 867-5893 or 867-5852.

SFIS student nominated to compete in national award program

Tamara Murray

ST. FRANCIS -Tamara Murray, a St. Francis Indian School, senior, from Rosebud, has been nominated to compete in the national Principal's Leadership Award scholarship program, sponsored by the National Association of Secondary School Principals.

One hundred national PLA winners will be chosen this spring to receive a college scholarship ranging from $1,000 to $12,000. "Tamara Murray was highly recommended from the Gifted and Talented Program of which she is very active in Leadership," said Barry Mann, high school principal. High school principals from across the country were able to nominate one of their student leaders.

Nominees were selected based on their leadership skills, participation in service organizations and clubs, achievements in the arts and sciences, employment experience, and academic record. They were also required to write an essay.

"Gerald N. Tirozzi, executive director of NASS said, "Tamara is an excellent example of what a true student leader embodies and deserves to be commended for her excellence in the classroom and community."

Murray has been student body president, a member of National Honor Society, and involved with the drama group. All of these things are the makings of a well rounded student. Tamara also participated in the In-Med Program at North Dakota State University the summer of her junior year. This fall she plans to attend Sinte Gleska University to study nursing.

NASSP, the preeminent school leadership organization, serves as national voice for middle level and high school principals, and aspiring school leaders.

Two Elk and His Horse Is Thunder excel in state oral interpretation

WATERTOWN - Nellie Two Elk, a sophomore at Todd County High School, placed top in the category of Serious Prose of Superior Performances at the 2007 State Oral Interpretation Festival in Watertown this past weekend on Nov. 30 to Dec. 1.

The oral interpretation competition is one of South Dakota High School Activities Association academic competitions held statewide.

Two Elk, from TCHS and Wiyaka His Horse Is Thunder, of Little Wound High School, both participated at the state level. His Horse is Thunder read a selection from poet Sylvia Plath.

Two Elk is the daughter of Claude Two Elk and Sarah Zephier and this is her second year of participating in state oral interpretation. Her father Claude said it encourages Indian students to be involved in this type of competition, it helps them improve their communications skills. Two Elk is also involved with the Lakota language bowl and is an honor student. Her material for the competition came from Leonard Peltier's book, "Prison Writings."

His Horse Is Thunder, a sophomore at Little Wound High School, champions in local speech contests. She was first alternate in the

Reader's Theatre, placed fifth in the Region V meet in Rapid City and placed first in Little Wound's first annual oral interpretation invitational. She is also active in cheerleading and in academics. She is the daughter of Ron His Horse Is Thunder of Ft. Yates, ND., president of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe and Vonnie Bush, of Grand Forks, N.D.

Benefit concert to be held in Michigan for Rosebud suicides

Munising, Mich. - The tiny northern Michigan town of Munising, Mich. will be the site of a second benefit concert on Dec. 15 to assist the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society in addressing the issue of teen suicides. The shelter was formed 30 years ago to address a variety of domestic violence issues confronting Sicangu Lakota women.

Pastor Lynn Hubbard and John Evans will perform at the Falling Rock Bookstore and Cafe.

The concert entitled, "Cowboys and Angels" is being organized by the Turtle Island Project. Hubbard will perform songs he has written including traditional songs of the season. The first benefit concert was held at the Custer Lutheran Fellowship Church on Aug. 12.

~Patrick Daniel 'Pat' Grooms~

DENBY - Patrick Daniel "Pat" Grooms, 76, died at his home in Denby, Nov. 25. He was born Feb. 3, 1931 at Wounded Knee. Patrick was a loving son to Frank and Gonna (Hanson) Grooms. He was a devoted father, brother, uncle, grandfather, great-grandfather and close friend. His family and friends were his life.

He was married to Lily Ann Galligo. Together hey had six children: daughter, Sandra Graff (and grandchildren: Lisa, Derek, and Amber and great grandchildren) of Las Vegas, Nev.; Patrick "Chuck" Grooms, Rapid City; Crystal Grooms (and her six children: Monty, Favian, Benjamin, William, Jessica and Monique and many great grandchildren) of Denby; Son, John Grooms (and his four children: Cassandra, Ashley, Breanna and Alexyss) of Las Vegas, Nev.; daughter, Veronica Theis (and her three children: Heather, Michael and Melissa) of Twin Falls, Idaho; Patricia Grooms of Las Vegas, Nev. who preceded him in death in April of 2007. Patrick had 10 brothers and sisters. He is also survived by his brother, Victor Grooms of Canon City, CO and sister, Martha Woodhouse of Gordon, Neb.; His brothers and sisters that passed away before him were Frank, Mary, Gertrude, Joseph, Aaron, Samuel, Henry, and Davis. May they greet him with open arms.

He married Kay York July 21, 1979. He was the caring step-father of Wayne York of Benton, Wash.. He grew up a Wounded Knee. He looked like the typical blond haired, blue eyed farm boy in his bib overalls. He attended a one room schoolhouse built by his father Frank there at Wounded Knee.

He was a middle child over the chores and duties of his older brothers Frank and Victor. They left to fight in World War II and he was responsible for helping his parents with the farm and livestock. At the age of 11 he had to do hard work and chores causing him to grow up before his time.

During his military career in the Army and Air Force he made many friends. He was a Korean War veteran as well. Many of the men who served with him were his buddies and friends. He kept in contact with several of them for many years after.

"Pat" was known to his family and friends as an avid joke teller. He kept us all laughing with his jokes and tales. He had a story for every setting. He enjoyed sitting with his company and relaying the daily news and happenings over a cup of coffee. He was a construction worker, ranch hand, mechanic, a good provider of fresh game, and a "damn" good cook. His specialty was delicious fried rabbit and biscuits with gravy. He was a leather craftsman, spur maker, and artist in his later years. He could turn a pair of spurs into a work of art, and a stone into beautiful sculpture with his creative artisitic abilities.

Pat Grooms, Danny Grooms, and Bill Grooms made up a trio of the most notorious "cowpokes" you ever did see. Together they were like something out of a Wild West novel. The stories of their expoits and camaraderie could keep you laughing till your sides hurt. They constantly teased each other with their made-up jokes. They were "Uncle Pat's" nephews and the closest of his companions.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I hate to say this, but I hear a lot about you. People gossip and some say things that are not very nice.

People say, who does she think she is? I have met you and you are very nice, also almost everything you told me would happen to me did happen.

There is talk going around that you think you are a medicine man or a prophet or something. Who are you really, and where do you come from?

I like you anyway.

Dear I like you anyway:

To say that I was a medicine man, a prophet, a saint, or whatever would be against my nature.

Who am I?

I am Anna B. I have no official authority. I have no culture to come from, unless you count my great grandmother who was a gypsy and traveled around the country telling fortunes out of an old wagon, with my grandfather (they never married). My grandfather sold "snake oil," natural and herbal cures. So, who do I think I am? Does that make me a Gypsy Queen?

I knew from the time I was a child I was different than others. I was equally embarrassed by both of my parents perception of God, through their anti-cultural marriage being a Gentile and a Jew.

I knew I was psychic from the time I was three years old.

It took me until I was in my early 40's to become comfortable with that. I discovered that I could heal sick animals when I was ten, and people when I was seventeen.

With those abilities or gifts, from my perspective, there are two responsibilities: Honor the gift, and Honor the lives of others.

It is my perception that my "gifts" comes from Source or God.

They are soul gifts. In order to honor the gifts I strive to live and honorable life. I reach for doing good with my gift. I try to live honorably, and reflect that to and in the world.

Prophecy is something everyone does, every day. It is a pretty hefty word. I have visions, and they include floods, earth disasters, a bombing of a U.S. City,. etc. I have talked with the Bureau of Reclamation regarding the flooding I see of the Cody Wyoming area. I think that word is too big for Anna B. I am comfortable with seeing these things and trying to change the impact of them.

I have had many times in my life when alerting the government of anyone, for that matter, of impending disaster has not had any effect at all; but I keep trying. No, I am not a prophet. I don't thinks prophets become prophets until after they're dead. That seems a far way to go for a title that would be impossible to life up to.

Sometimes people don't like what I say. Sometimes, when I help one person it thwarts another. I come from a good heart. That is where I come from.

I know peace in my heart. I know others can feel and be peaceful. I know they don't have to suffer. I know how to get there, personally, from experience and proof. That is also where I come from.

In the process of seeking God, I have discovered the value of balance in all things. I seek balance.

That is where I come from.

I come from sixty years of living in the world. I come from knowing the stings of many of life experiences.

I come from soul searching and praying.

I come from the experiencing of true miracles upon the earth. I come from the sounds of the "spirits" or "guides" that talk with me. I come from the dead who come to me.

I come from the grief of tears that I feel for the wrongness in the world, I come from understanding that things don't have to be so bad. I come from a place where I see great loss upon the earth, and feel that changing people's minds and understanding of what they can do can soften that impact.

I come from a place of promise, of many years ago, that I made with my "spirits," guides," or "council," to help.

I am a psychic and a healer, and that is what I do. I come from a good place.

I am a human being on a journey in flesh in the world, in the United States, in South Dakota and Nebraska. I am a lot like you are, except, that I am me.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

Could I have pre-diabetes?

Most people don't know if they have pre-diabetes. You could have prediabetes if:

- Someone in your family has diabetes.
- You weigh more than you should
- You had diabetes while you were prenant (called gestational diabetes)
- You had a baby weighing over 9 lbs. at birth
- A doctor or nurse has said to you that you had a "touch of sugar" or "pre-diabetes"

Truancy is a symptom of deeper problems

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY -Truancy, or absence from school, is a symptom of deeper problems in a child's life, according to experts who spoke at the sixth-annual Judiciary and Education Collaboration meeting in Rapid City on Friday, Nov. 30.

About 50 leaders in schools, the court system, and other local, state and tribal agencies came together to find ways of addressing the problems underlying truancy, according to Pratt Anspach, truancy coordinator with Pennington County Juvenile Diversion Program.

Seventh Judicial Circuit Judge Merton Tice said his work with Rapid City Central's in-school truancy court is his most valuable contribution."I've considered nothing - nothing - that I do more important than making a difference in the area of truancy," Tice said. "If you can address that issue in a proper way, a constructive way, to the underlying problems of truancy, you can eliminate a lot more problems that will develop later on in the child's life."

Keith Moore

Tice said he's reluctant to use the term "truancy court," because the proceedings are unofficial. Students participate voluntarily to try to find solutions so their behavior doesn't end up in the court system.

Holding truancy court on school grounds emphasizes the cooperation between the school and court system and the willingness of the school to invest deeply in finding positive solutions.

"It's not simply a matter of a punitive process; it's rather a process of solving problems, and you solve the problems in the schools a lot better than trying to solve them in a courtroom," Tice said.

Keith Moore, Indian Education coordinator with the state Department of Education, said poverty is a primary cause of the achievement gap between minorities and whites that grows wider as kids get older. He said minority students need to be prepared for post-

Silent film, recordings repatriated to Sicangu Heritage Center

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

MISSION - In August, Oklahoma State University professor emeritus of music, Evan Tonsing, returned a number of cultural items which he hoped would strengthen the Sicangu Lakota culture. Professor Tonsing is a collector of Native film, photographs and music.

Terry Gray, Native American Graves and Protection Act coordinator for the Rosebud Sioux tribe and of the Sicangu Heritage Center led the repatriation effort as he has done for other such cultural objects that belong to the Sicangu people and which may have been placed in museums and private collections throughout the country.

Professor Tonsing who studied music from traditional cultures around the world explained his desire to return the repatriated items to the Sicangu as a way of strengthening the culture.

The public was invited to event which featured a short 1894 film by Thomas Edison of Lakota people dancing with Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show.

The other repatriated items included photographs by Edward S. Curtis from 1906 and recordings of Lakota songs from 1907.

A short 1930 film featuring Sicangu, Chauncey Yellow Robe, was also among the items. The silent movie was entitled "The Silent Enemy" and members of the Yellow Robe family and others in attendance were given copies.

The professor also assisted in identifying the 273 recordings made by Curtis from 1907 to 1913 and which are kept at the Archive of Traditional Music at Indiana University.

Last weekend, the Sicangu Heritage Center held an open house during which it played "The Silent Enemy" for visitors.

The open house coincided with the artists market sponsored by the Horizons Project held at the SGU multipurpose building. Visitors were also treated to some holiday treats created by Keli Herman of the Sicangu Heritage Center staff. Marcella Cash has been the director since its initial opening and has led the center in archiving and displaying Sicangu cultural items in a novel and innovative fashion.

Little Wound, Todd County, Pine Ridge, Red Cloud open boys season with wins

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

MARTIN - After a busy spring and summer, and a good deal of offseason work this fall, Red Cloud opened the 2007/2008 boy's basketball season Friday night in Martin against Bennett County; the Crusaders went up 17-1 in the first quarter, slacked off in the second quarter as Bennett County outscored the Crusaders 16-12 and ended up leading only 29-17 at the half; after a serious discussion with their coach, Matt Rama, Red Cloud picked up the tempo and focus in the second half for an 88-39 win over the Warriors.

Red Cloud is coming off of a 19-4 record last year with their top eight players returning, spent the spring and summer playing over 70 games in preparation for this year and featured five players in double figures in their first win of a new campaign. Christian McGhee led all scorers

TWO SECTIONS

Handful of elected officials push to rescind child and family code

Groups work to understand new law, promote awareness

By Ivan Starr
Special the Times

Within a span of four days, I attended two separate meetings and found what I can only describe as a rift between tribal groups working to comply with the new Child and Family Code. I am still not clear on who did what; however, communication and collaboration are definitely lacking.

ANALYSIS

Ideally, these two groups should be working as a singular unit. The two meetings resulted from a recent tribal government action to rescind the new law. The first meeting on Dec. 6, 2007 was in Pine Ridge. This gathering consisted of about half of the homeland's 26 Tiospaye Interpreters and representatives of Public Safety.

Initially, the meeting was somewhat intense which I believe was the response of some talk to rescind the law and to remove the interpreters altogether to make things easier for everyone else. Adding to this was the fact that legislative action occurred without the knowledge or input of the interpreter group or anybody else for that matter.

As I had mentioned in one of my previous articles, when government information is absent, people tend to talk and rumor spreading becomes rampant. The absence of minutes of the alleged governmental actions became the final determining factor regarding the end consensus. The group decided to continue working to understand the new law and to get solid information.

Another direction taken was to increase public awareness. I believe the tribal constituency needs to be aware of the new law. Everyone involved would probably agree that if the people knew about this law and the role of the interpreters, it would contribute toward its success. The Tiospaye Interpreters are to air every Wednesday from 8-9 a.m., beginning Dec. 12.

What agitated the group were rumors that seemingly targeted the interpreter's; alluding that there are no provisions to guarantee confidentiality and for background investigations. A show of hands during the meeting found a majority of the interpreters had passed recent background checks. The rest were encouraged to get a background check done.

The other meeting took place at our casino on Dec. 9 and consisted of tribal education, child advocacy, the court, law enforcement, and Tiospaye Interpreter representation. This is where the budding separation became evident. Although both groups are involved with the new Code, there is a clear disconnection with 19 points, added six assists, five rebounds and four steals; Billy Scott chipped in 16 points and five rebounds, Mike Cuny came off the bench to tip in 13, Carl Swallow added 12 and Dave Giago, also coming off the bench tossed in 10 points. Lester Gotheridge, struggled with fouls the entire game but grabbed a game high 10 rebounds as Red Cloud outrebounded the Warriors 40-37.

Red Cloud will not be back in action until Dec. 19 when they play Crazy Horse at 10 a.m. at St. Thomas More high school in the first round of the Lakota Nation, a tournament that Red Cloud has received a number one seed.

Orin Three Stars, a transfer from Little Wound led Bennett County with 14 points, Ryan Risse helped with seven points and six rebounds. John Slattery led Bennett County with seven boards while fouling out with 2:23 to go in the game.

Three Stars hit for 32 points on Saturday night in Ft. Pierre as he helped Bennett County break a 24 game losing streak as the Warriors came from behind to beat Stanley County 67-57. Now 1-1, Bennett County hosts Wall on Dec. 13 and travels to Gordon on Friday.

Little Wound picked up their second straight win of the season on the road downing Crow Creek 71-43 on Saturday in Highmore.

With new coach, Rob Mendoza, the Mustangs ran a one-two-one-one press and Crow Creek struggled to get the ball up the floor; senior Brice Hornbeck was unstoppable finishing the game with 26 points, nine rebounds, nine steals and six assists. Eddie Wright, a transfer from Eagle Butte, hit for 14 points and grabbed 12 rebounds while Bret Thunder Hawk added 12 points. After opening up 28-4 lead in the first quarter, the Mustangs cruised to their second win of the season.

Larry Gayton led Crow Creek with 17 points, Ryan Bowker chipped in nine points and eight rebounds. Crow Creek is 0-1 on the season and travels to Flandreau Indian on Friday.

The Mustangs opened their season under their new head coach, Rob Mendoza, on Friday with a strong 90-52 win over St. Francis.

"We put on our full court press and the Warriors just struggled to get the ball up the floor," said Rob Mendoza, "we had a chance to play everyone and even run some offense, we're going to be a little bit more disciplined this year."

Senior Brice Hornbeck led all scorers with 28 points, Casey Montileaux added 19 while Eddie Wright led the team in rebounds with 11. Tim Little Shield led St. Francis with 26 points and seven rebounds, Richard Spotted Tail helped with 12 points.

After wins over St. Francis and Crow Creek, Little Wound doesn't return to action until 7 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 19, during the Lakota Nation where they play St. Francis again at SD Tech.

Pine Ridge opened their boy's season at St. Francis on Tuesday, with 10 different ballplayers getting in the scoring column including three in double figures, the Thorpes knocked off St. Francis 87-60 for their first win of the year.

Jeff Pourier with seven and Jared Eagle Bull with 10 points got things rolling for the Thorpes in the first quarter as the team took a 24-15 lead; Tim Little Shield led the Warriors comeback hitting 16 points in the first half to help St. Francis close the gap to 29-26 as Pine Ridge couldn't buy a bucket in the second quarter hitting only five free throws for the quarter.

Roman Leftwich cranked Pine Ridge up in the third with eight of his 16 points while Red Cloud transfer, Ezra Zephier, scored seven of his nine points in the third as well to help the Thorpes outscore the Warriors 32-8 and head into the fourth with a 61-34 lead. Stan Brewer, a senior, hit two threes and Dalton Buckman, a freshman, scored all seven of his points in the fourth to seal the deal. Pourier put the hustle on all game and finished up with 13 points, eight rebounds, six steals and four assists. Leftwich with 16 and Eagle Bull with 10 were the only other Thorpes in double figures.

Little Shield finished with 20 points and 13 rebounds while Richard Spotted Tail added 19 points, five steals and nine rebounds. St. Francis is now 0-2 and will play Little Wound Wednesday night at the LNI in Rapid City at SD Tech at 7 p.m.

Pine Ridge travels to Todd County on Thursday, travels to Eagle Butte on Saturday and opens LNI against CEB at SD Tech on Wednesday night at 8:30 p.m.

David Giago, Red Cloud senior forward, snares a rebound Friday night in Martin as Bennett County's Chase Kieffe tries to swat it away and Jesse Risse(35) looks on, the number one rated Crusaders opened the 2007/08 boy's basketball season with an 88-39 win over Bennett County in a first step on a path leading to Sioux Falls in mid March for the South Dakota State A Boy's basketball tournament.

2007-2008 Boy's high school basketball previews

Little Wound Mustangs

"One thing we are going to make sure of, there will be no angry outbursts, no unsportsmanlike conduct," said Rob Mendoza who moved from assistant girls coach at Little Wound to head boys coach, "Tom Allen and Linda Hunter wrote up a strong sportsmanship plan, Little Wound is on probation for a year after events of last spring and we are going to have a well-organized program based on respect."

TJ McCauley, Rich Big Boy, Devon LeBeau, Shilo Pierce, Michael Apple and Dustin Shangreaux are gone from a Little Wound team that went to state the last two years taking seventh and second in the last two years. The coaching staff and the athletic director are also gone.

But Brice Hornbeck is still here for his senior year. Although there was talk of Brice going to Bismarck for his senior year, he chose to stay home and lead the Mustangs, and leading the Mustangs he will. Hornbeck hit for 28 points in the first game against St. Francis and against Crow Creek on Saturday he scored 26 points, grabbed nine rebounds and finished with nine steals and six assists. He is definitely something to build a team around. Ty Lunderman applied for a hardship since this is his fifth year in high school, the SDHSAA granted him one semester of eligibility, spring semester 2008. Currently, Eddie Wright, 5'11" junior forward transferred from Cheyenne Eagle Butte and has grabbed double figure rebounds in both of Little Wound's two games. Casey Montileaux is playing as a senior and will contribute in scoring and playing defense. Brett Thunder Hawk, a 5'11 senior gets a starting nod and will help on offense. Todd Phelps is the tallest Mustang and he gets the starting nod until someone takes it away.

Helping from the bench right now but with the potential to crack the starting lineup is Trin In The Woods, a 6'0" junior, Kevin Eagle Heart, a 6'2" junior, Jacey Mesteth, a 6'3" junior, Spur Pourier, a 6'1" freshman, Jared White Face, Michael Pretty Voice Crane, Morris Holy Rock and Brennan Montgomery.

"No we are not the same team as last year," said Mendoza, "It's going to take a few games to build some team chemistry, to learn to trust one another, play good team defense, but we'll get there and it will be a fun trip."

Pine Ridge Thorpes

Bill Pourier is back as coach for the Thorpes, Shawn Keith and Jeff Pourier are two players left from last year's varsity and throw in several new faces. Roman Leftwich, a 6'2" forward thought about going to Red Cloud but stayed to play for the Thorpes, Ezra Zephier, a 5'8" junior guard came over from Red Cloud, Jerad Eagle Bull, a 6'1" senior feels it is his time now. Dalton Buckman, a 5'9" freshman will get playing time, Stan Brewer, Sky Young and Emerson Bob Tail Bear will help at the guards while Eric Long, Daniel Bull Bear and Paul Bear Saves Life will work down low and on the boards.

What the team doesn't have in varsity experience will be made up with a love for the game and a desire to make good on an opportunity to play at the varsity level.

The consensus of the second meeting: the two groups need to work together. Everyone stated there are many "kinks" to iron out which is eminent with any new thing. The attendees all expressed their desire to see the new Code succeed for the sake of our children. The first meeting is set for January 12 and 13, 2008, site to be confirmed later.

Meanwhile, one recommended change that will be going to the Judiciary Committee is the Code's 120-day compliance mandate. One of the court judges reported that only one tribal entity submitted its compliance plan thereby meeting the requirement. All other entities are now out of compliance and this alone seems to be causing undue tensions.

In their endeavors to comply with the new law, court officials had approached the tribal Judiciary Committee with some recommendations. Instead, the unexpected idea to repeal came into being. The court did not intend to rescind the code, as was thought by the interpreter group. That action originated from a handful of our elected officials and it is theirs alone.

Such an amendment will relieve the pressure that is seemingly causing a disruption in the flow of things, so to speak. It can contribute to progress. All the entities involved, except for one, are now so ridiculously out of compliance, the current provision is mute. A new deadline or a new set of compliance requirements can benefit the entire tribal effort.

All entities were to submit their plans to the Children and Family Court, which is vested with the authority to determine whether an entity is compliant. The court can grant an additional 30 days to meet the deadline. Anyway, all entities should have been compliant by Oct. 2, 2007.

The law also provides procedures for reporting non-compliant entities. Any individual may report an entity that is out of compliance by filing a complaint in tribal court to be adjudicated as a civil matter.

Under the law, such non-compliant entities become subject to fines. If the tribal court determines an entity to be willfully and neglectfully non-compliant, the entity can be 1) fined at $1000 a day, 2) suspended for an indefinite period of time, and 3) reported to the entity's governing body or other entity (Tribal Council) having jurisdiction over it.

The tribal entities subject to this Code are those who work in the following areas: Law Enforcement, Social/Human Services, Child Protection, Child Advocacy, Child Neglect, Domestic Violence, Education, Foster Care, Medical Care, Mental Health Care, Adjudication, and Religion/Culture/Spirituality.

All organizations are required to make necessary changes to "provide opportunities to develop sufficient knowledge and understanding of the Lakota concepts, protocols, and definitions of the Code." Staff and board training and orientation includes volunteers and consultants. Revisions include policy and procedures, mission statements, philosophy, and vision.

If anything, this should be the primary concern at this point in the life of the OST Child and Family Code. Any other discussion outside of a formal meeting is nothing more than rumor.

Development of the law took seven years and the input of many prominent Lakota individuals. It is not a spontaneous idea nor was it tossed together in a matter of weeks or months. It is an idea and a law born out of love for children, Lakota ways, justice, and self-determination.

We, as Lakota people patiently endured some of this country's most blatantly brutal atrocities for more than a century. It has been eight months since the law's enactment and already we are experiencing a snag causing us to polarize, taking up positions of battle. We must absolutely work together to keep our children at home where they truly belong.

We are survivors of a real experience that most tribal people will refuse to hear, acknowledge, or discuss. This is genocide: the planned, systematic annihilation of a racial, political, or cultural group. As a survivor, I have a hard time understanding this popular reaction, especially here on the most strife-stricken reservation in the country.

Initially, when the Wasicu came, they saw "Indians" as obstacles to their own progress and devised ways to remove them. They soon realized they could not do so with war and tried other methods. Consequently, we have been surviving under a unilateral relationship with the new United States' national government, as well as with our own "tribal" government.

The following should help illustrate this. The first element we must understand is that Lakota people, at one time, were truly autonomous. They had a singular form of government (Tiospaye), belief system, Creation chronicle (similar to Bible), language, culture, and history.

Lakota people occupied most of the Great Plains. The Wasicu saw the area as belonging to the people occupying it, drew up treaties, and identified it as such. As the new nation grew, they needed more land and decided to appropriate those treaty-established lands via a planned, systematic strategy leaving us with small parcels (reservations) today.

Land loss is not the only issue. Our language and culture are targets of obliteration. Destroying the family unit and taking children away to become "productive citizens" is another eradication routine. Replacing the old government with the Indian Reorganization Act is another ago-old tactic used to enervate (weaken) a people.

Then, with an incredible move, our tribal council, through the efforts of dozens of caring people, enacted a law that actually counters that centuries-long eradication process, which is the Child and Family Code. The Code is a beginning, but it is the only optimistic thing going for us today. It definitely beats the usual handouts of used clothing, food items, and small amounts of money.

Why then, are a handful of our elected officials looking to rescind this century's most phenomenal piece of tribal legislation?

What is the reason for quashing it without the knowledge and input of the voting public? Where is the democracy in that? Are these few actually agents of oppression too?

Pine Ridge, Red Cloud open seasons with wins, Lady Mustangs lose two close contests

Little Wound hangs on for Big Foot B Girl's championship

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

KYLE - Little Wound and Red Cloud both sported new coaches, both finished up with 32 turnovers, both teams had three in double figures and two players fouled out in the fourth period while Little Wound had 28 fouls, Red Cloud finished up with 30 on the way to a hard fought 64-59 season opening win over Little Wound Thursday night.

The Lady Crusaders opened the game with an 8-0 run and eventually took a 15 point 43-28 lead in the third only to see the Lady Mustangs fight back and take one point leads of 49-48 and 55-54 in the fourth quarter only to have Marque Lunderman come back into the game in the fourth after a bad cramp in her right calf and score four of her 15 points in the final period to help Red Cloud ice the win.

Shaina Clifford, moving to the three position after playing the point last year, hit for a team high 16 points with three steals and three rebounds before fouling out with 1:29 to go in the game. Lunderman hit for 15 points, grabbed four rebounds with three assists and two steals while Ida Clarke hit for a double double with 13 points and 12 rebounds and added seven steals and three assists.

Little Wound's Nichelle Red Owl, returned to Little Wound from Pine Ridge for her senior season, hit three threes and 22 points to lead the Lady Mustangs before fouling out with 2:10 left in the fourth. Sophomore Kirsten Clifford poured in 10 points before fouling out with 4:31 to go in the fourth, Kanisha Rooks also hit for 10 points and Dakota Flying Hawk grabbed a team high 13 rebounds coming off the bench for the Lady Mustangs

Red Cloud doesn't return to action until Wednesday, Dec. 19 playing Lower Brule in the opening round of the Lakota Nation Invitational tourney in Rapid City.

Little Wound traveled to Pine Ridge on Tuesday looking to pick up their first win of the season over a tough Pine Ridge team, the Lady Thorpes led at each quarter break on the way to a 53-49 win. Up by only three at the end of three, Pine Ridge opened up an 11 point lead with a minute to go only to see Little Wound pull within two 51-49 with eight seconds left in the game before Pine Ridge finished it off sinking two free throws to end the game and grab the win.

Lacey Weston led Pine Ridge with 22 points, Saadia Tasso chipped in 18 and Sophia Janis helped out with 10 assists. Nichelle Red Owl led the Lady Mustangs with 20 points, Kirsten Clifford had eight points and six rebounds, Dakota Flying Hawk came off the bench for seven points and Kanisha Rooks led the team with six assists.

Pine Ridge is now 2-0 and travels to Eagle Butte on Saturday while Little Wound is now 0-2 and hosts Bennett County on Monday.

Standing Rock opens season 4-0 behind high scoring freshman

Shauna Long, a 5'2" freshman, has set the tone for her Standing Rock Lady Warriors as they have opened the season with four straight wins getting ready for the upcoming Lakota Nation Invitational.

Long scored 21 points in the Lady Warrior's season opener, a 59-45 win over Center-Stanton. Shauna scored 16 in a win over South Border and hit for 21 again as Standing Rock defeated Grand River 51-42. on Monday night, Long scored 21 points in a 71-52 win over Mobridge; she is averaging 20 points a game in her first four games as a freshman.

At one point, Long was going to move down to Pine Ridge with her father, Albert Long, and enroll at Pine Ridge high school for her high school years; a tragic accident this summer took the life of Long, a past Pine Ridge graduate and changed Shauna's direction, she stayed with her mother Margaret Gates and is playing high school ball with Standing Rock.

Standing Rock is the number five seed in this year's Lakota Nation and will play Takini at 4 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 19 at the Civic Center.

Little Wound edges Red Cloud for Big Foot B championship

BATESLAND - Little Wound and Red Cloud came into the Big Foot Conference B Girl's championship game with one loss on their record, Red Cloud had lost earlier to Little Wound 35-32 while Little Wound had lost by 11 points to Pine Ridge; Red Cloud kept the game close, down by two at the first quarter break, 13-11, down by two 24-22 at the half but couldn't get any closer as Little Wound knocked off Red Cloud in a three point win 39-36 on Thursday.

Larae Morgan fouled out with 3:18 to go in the game but hit for nine points before she left and added two steals and three rebounds for the Lady Mustangs. Elizabeth Charging Crow led the way with 10 points and seven rebounds, Lexi Amiotte chipped in six points and grabbed eight boards while Erica Crow finished up with seven points and a game high nine rebounds.

Christy Sioux Bob led Red Cloud with 14 points, Kristin Brave grabbed 22 rebounds and added seven steals while Cassandra Black Horn chipped in eight points, eight rebounds and five steals.

Pine Ridge knocked off Porcupine for third and American Horse took fifth. Team sportsmanship went to Crazy Horse.

All tourney awards went to Erica Crow and Lexi Amiotte of Little Wound, Christy Sioux Bob and CeCe Two Lance of Red Cloud, Santana White Dress and Sherie Cottier of Pine Ridge, Denisha Larson/Porcupine, Cheyenne Palmier/American Horse, Shannon Hinton/Loneman, Jenelle Ribitsch/Wolf Creek, Patti Cuny/Our Lady of Lourdes and Justina LeBeau/Batesland.

Larae Morgan was selected as the MVP, Kristin Brave/Ms. Hustle, Christy Sioux Bob/Ms. Offense and Elizabeth Charging Crow/Ms. Defense.

2007-08 Girls high school basketball previews:

Little Wound Lady Mustangs

"It's a struggle at first, a new coach and a new style," said Ted Standing Soldier, Jr. the new head girl's coach at Little Wound, "we are headsy, we have several playmakers, girls that can shoot and we just need to learn to play together as a team."

Starters for Little Wound will be Nichelle Red Owl, a 5'6" senior, shooting guard who transferred back to Little Wound from Pine Ridge where she helped the team to a 21-1 record and a number one ranking in the state before losing to Bennett County in the district championship; Kirsten Clifford who plays power forward or center, only a 5'9" sophomore, but a player who continues to get stronger and who has an impact on the boards and in the scoring column; Kanisha Rooks, a 5'4" sophomore guard who will help the tam on defense, hand out assists and score; Tawni Shay Hunter, a 5'6" junior guard who brings a lot of fire to the position, scrappiness and a never give an inch defense and Tangerine LeBeau, a 5'7" guard/forward who is returning to the court as a senior hungry to make up for lost time and ready to play a positive role on defense and on the boards for the new cosch.

Dakota Flying Hawk, a 5'9" freshman will be one of the first players off the bench to work hard underneath the basket, fighting for territory and grabbing rebounds; Veronica Richards, a 5'6" senior guard, a three point threat, Jhacie Long Soldier, a 5'8" sophomore who can hit the three and play defense and Annisa Around Him, a 5'8" sophomore who will focus on the boards. Others on varsity include Autumn Hollow Horn, Aileen White Face, Melissa White Eyes, Sydnee Ferguson, Frankie Villareal and Laura Cummings.

"Many teams will underestimate us," said Standing Soldier, "we are going to play solid defense, take care of the ball and shoot high percentage shots everytime, it may take a few games but we will get there."

Todd County Lady Falcons

Bob Boyd, Jr. is the Lady Falcons third coach in three years, Boyd moves over from his assistant coach position with the boys team and is looking to focus on defense and become fundamentally sound.

"The girls have been working really hard, they have bought into the new system and are becoming defensive minded," said Boyd, "we have a challenging schedule that should help us get ready for districts and regionals, Platte and Winner make it a tough district and Bennett County and Pine Ridge make it a tough region."

Shelby Hunger, a 5'11" junior forward is relentless on the boards and Jordan Rahn, a 5'10" junior forward will help, in fact Boyd says that all five players will be working hard for rebounds; Christine Crow Eagle, a 5'4" guard, Perry DeCory, a 5'6" guard and Josie Stone, a 5'6" junior guard/forward will round out the starting five. Coming off the bench will be Auriah Prue, missing the first two games, Cassie Prue, Christian Old Lodge, Britney Larvie, Mariaha Emery, Lisa Antoine, Jessica Peneaux, Nellie Menard and Samantha DeCory.

"This team will be very athletic, I've been challenging them to play tough defense," said Boyd, "we are coming in as the sixth seed at the Lakota Nation, the girls finished third last year and they should be better than last year."

St. Francis Lady Warriors

Corry Roberts represents continuity as he returns as the head coach for St. Francis Lady Warriors; he will be assisted by Dave Waliser and Pam Kills In Water.

Kali Brave, A 5'10" very athletic guard will anchor the Lady Warriors, Marci Rodriguez, a 5'9" freshman is coming off a very successful freshman year returns as the point guard, her athleticism and court sense will help guide the Lady Warriors and set an up-tempo tone to their play; Jessica Rouillard, a 6'1" junior will cause a number of teams problems under the basket and in the paint as she works hard on the boards and works to stop any attempts to drive the basket; Sissy Brave, a 5'8" forward will help inside with rebounding and look to the sophomore in helping to put some points n the board and Erin Rodriguez, a 5'9" senior who will help with handling the ball and adding scoring punch.

Coming off the bench will be Valerie Boltz, a 5'9" freshman, Starla Walking Eagle, a 6'0" sophomore, Jenna Bad Hand, a 5'8" sophomore, Winona White Lance, Courtney Spotted Elk, Melanie Running Horse, Laura Brushbreaker, Brittany Iron Shell, Roseanne Eagle Road and Tamara Murray.

St. Francis has a good mix of older and younger players and as soon as they build some team chemistry and learn to trust one another, they will upset a few apple carts along the way to districts.

high school experiences, including higher education, with programs such as GEAR-UP to enrich math, language arts, science, and career exploration.

Moore noted that South Dakota is the only state that doesn't have a needs-based scholarship program and encouraged people to contact the Board of Regents about correcting that deficiency.

Mike Talley, Central High School's new principal, explained a program called Positive Behavioral Interventions and Support (see www.pbis.org).

Certain socio-economic factors such as poverty and minority status carry risk factors that can manifest in negative behaviors, one of which is truancy, Talley said.

Too often, the schools' response is to punish negative behavior, but it is more effective to teach positives such as academic skills and reward good behavior, he said.

Vice-Principal Mike Deming said North Middle School, with about a 50-50 Native/white mix and 86 percent free-and-reduced lunch participants, had an "atrocious" truancy rate six years ago when he came on board.

But attendance rate has now improved, from 91 percent to 93 percent, a result Deming calls "huge."

The school uses a rewards system called Eagle Cash: students are issued cards that are stamped by teachers, and each stamp is worth a certain amount of "fake money," Deming said.

Students can spend their earned money at the Eagle Cash store for such things as school supplies or sports equipment - skateboards, basketballs, footballs, and such - donated by Scheels.

Prices are inflated, Deming pointed out. "A pencil might cost you five bucks in Eagle Cash money," he said, and a skateboard could be as much as $5,000.

But students respond well to the rewards system. "It's really kind of fun to watch," he said.

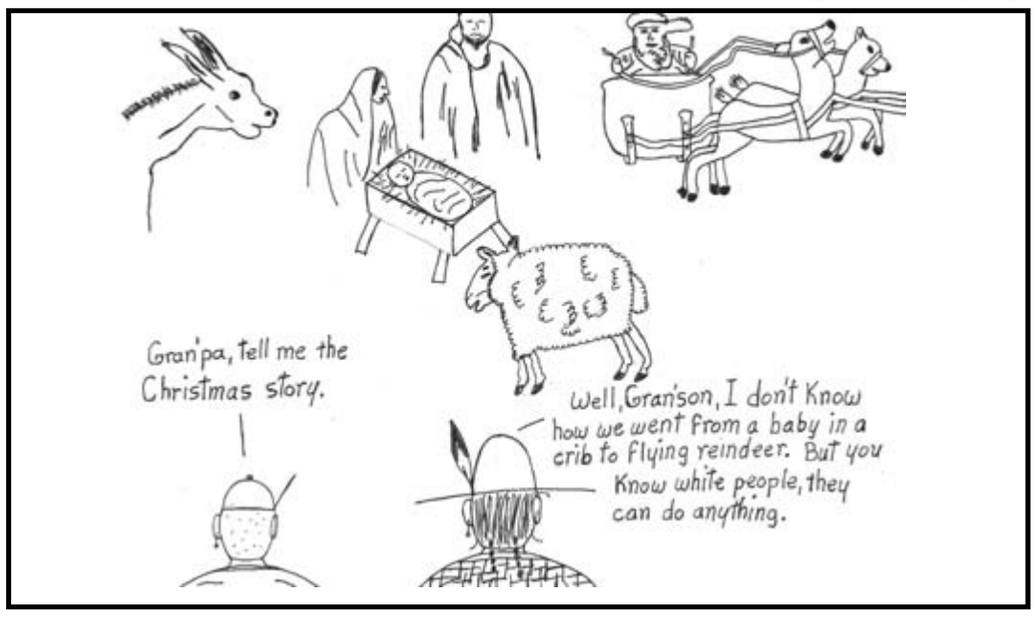
In addition to monetary rewards, North has implemented Saturday school for chronic truants, instead of suspending them; uses the GEAR-UP program; and has increased teacher contact time with students, Deming said.

The Rapid City truancy prevention network includes parents in the solution, and one tool for doing that is the Skyward computer program.

Katie Bray, assistant superintendent of student achievement at Rapid City district administration, said Skyward was first implemented a few years ago, but recently an online grade book was added to allow parents to monitor their children's day-to-day progress.

With a password and a computer, parents of students in grades 6-12 can find their children's grades, their attendance record, what they had for lunch, and whether they've completed their work.

The teacher has the option of writing an email to the parent, explaining concerns such as when a student hasn't turned in homework for three days, Bray said.



If parents don't have Internet access at home, they can use computers at the public library or at certain schools.

District Superintendent Peter Wharton said training discs will be available to lead parents through the process of accessing the records.

Bray said parental involvement can improve academic success, and academic success battles truancy. "I firmly believe when children are successful in school, they want to be in school," Bray said. "And if they're not successful, that's part of why they don't go."

Letters to the Editor

What can we do to get our language back?

Dear Editor:

Cante Waste Nape Ciyuzape Ksto, I come to you with a good heart.

Lakota language is important today because our language is slowly dying out. The older people should teach younger kids Lakota so that it won't be so hard to get the language back. My name is Nanette White Buffalo and I am a student from St. Francis Indian School and I ask, "What can we do to get our language back?" Our identity is almost all gone.

We watched a film about native languages in my class, and the person in the video who inspired me the most was named Kathleen Gordon.

She told the same story that my grandmother told me, about the boarding schools and how they stripped the native students of their clothing and language. She inspired me to make an effort to learn my language and try my hardest to understand it. Kathleen Gordon reminds me of my grandma. She's caring and generous and strong in spirit. Her story made me realize that not many people speak our language and that our identity and culture is being lost. Some of our people were killed at the boarding schools for being themselves and practicing their way of life. Tunkasila didn't make us that way, to kill each other and to take stuff from others. Another thing that Kathleen Gordon said that inspired me was "Creator gave us our ways of life as a gift and it's a way to express ourselves as native people." This shows me she has a lot of respect and I thank her for what she is saying.

One of the quotes I liked from the film was "Intelligent people don't burn down libraries. Language is an enormous library of culture and heritage." This reminds me of something my grandfather told me before he died, he said that Lakota traditions represent blueprints for thinking and how we experience things. Why do languages matter? Language matters because in the white world no one ever thinks about anyone but themselves and in the Lakota tradition everyone shares and no one gives up! It is important to preserve Lakota ways because they are stronger than white ways. White people brought alcohol and drugs and gave it to the Lakota's. Look at most of us now, we're alcoholics and drug addicts. We lost our identity now its time to get it back; we have to fight for our culture and language now. I relate to this teaching because my mother and grandmother always tried to make me learn Lakota, but instead I wanted to go out and have fun with friends thinking that it wasn't important. Now that I realized that my culture is dying out I want to help!

The reason why people should work to preserve Lakota language is because most high school students like me want to take more Lakota culture classes. We think all Lakota people should be able to speak their language. Kids are committing suicide because their identity is lost and they don't know who they really are! High school students should be able to take more Lakota language classes, so that the language will endure and our power will grow. The community and tribal staff should put out a petition about how the Lakota language can be preserved. Finally parents and grandparents should teach their children as much Lakota as they can and talk to them in Lakota language so that it will be easier for them to learn when they get in high school.

Some Indian people have become ashamed to be Lakota

Dear Editor,

My name is Maurissa Mae Donald. I am from Rosebud Reservation. I go to school at St. Francis Indian School. I am writing to you about why Lakota Language is important to me.

When I was only three yeas old I knew three languages, Lakota, Navajo, and English. When my mom registered me at preschool at Salt Lake City I had to take a test for them. Two native teachers gave me the test. They tried to speak to me in English, but I would just stared at them until my mom told them to ask me the name of the shape in Navajo. I understood it and the teachers were very surprised.

When the teacher didn't know how to say sun in Navajo, my mom told her the Lakota word for sun. I point at the sun. The native teachers were happy that I knew my two native languages and also English.

Lakota Culture is important to me because it tells everyone who I am. It's a part of my identity, and everyone else's here too.

Native people come from different tribes all over the United States. One thing that represents them all is their languages. Language is your own way of speaking to others whom have the same culture. When Indians from different tribes meet, one of the first questions asked is, do you speak your own language? If you don't know how to speak your language, it sounds like you don't care about your culture.

Some Native Americans are still ashamed of speaking their language because of their experience in boarding schools. Boarding school students were punished for being Lakota, and speaking their language. The white people took away our language and identity. Some Indians believe whatever white people say and think about them. Those Indian people have become ashamed to be Lakota.

I would save our Lakota language by letting the elder tribe members help the next generation. Indians schools should have language classes for all the high school students. On week-ends, they should open the youth center to the community for everyone to come and speak and learn Lakota.

The students should have Native Americans games, quilting, beading, and maybe cooking. That is what we should do for our community members and youth.

Our Views

Insulting an elderly Lakota man in Rapid City

Rapid City draws thousands of visitors from Pine Ridge, Rosebud and the other Indian nations in the region for the LNI Tournament.

The Lakota/Dakota people spend millions of dollars there every year.

Now we would like to offer all of our readers a cautionary warning. If you experience any form of racial discrimination in Rapid City during the LNI please write it down and email it or send it to Lakota Country Times and we will publish your remarks.

Case in point: Last Monday an elderly Lakota man purchased gasoline at the BP Station and Mini-Store on East North and Milwaukee Streets in Rapid City. He paid for his gas at the pump and then went into the store to buy a lottery ticket, something he did every week at that very store.

There was a new attendant behind the counter, a young white woman about 23 years of age.

He handed her his lottery ticket and when she returned it to him with the stub he handed her some money and asked her if that was enough. She didn't answer him, or since he was a little hard of hearing he did not hear her answer. When he asked her again if this was enough the woman said very loudly and angrily, "I JUST GOT DONE TELLING YOU THAT THIS WAS ENOUGH!"

Taken aback by her angry response, he took his ticket and said to the young lady, "I think you should be a little more respectful to your customers." The young lady replied with venomous anger, "F_ _ _ YOU."

The elderly Lakota man left the store in a state of shock and anger. He called BP's headquarters and they professed shock and said they would take care of the matter.

One week later the girl was still working in the store and absolutely nothing had been done to reprimand her. In fact, her profanity was reason for termination, not reprimand. If she had said these words to an elderly white customer do you think she would have gotten away with it?

It is a shame that these racist things still go on in a city that draws millions of dollars in business every year from the citizens of Indian country. To use the F-Word to an elderly Lakota man for him simply asking to be treated with respect is unthinkable and reprehensible. And for no action to be taken against the vile young lady is even more unthinkable.

And so we ask all of our readers to write down any racial discrimination they run into while visiting Rapid City for the LNI Tournament and we will publish your comments and let's see what we can do to bring this kind of nonsense to an end once and for all.

Letters to the Editor

Learning the languages gives you identity and pride

Dear Editor,

Lakota Language is a part of my culture. I think the students here should have more of our language taught to them. We have many different Lakota classes but none that focus strictly on language. I feel as if our generation has been skipped or lost with the teachings of our ancestors.

A lot of kids today don't learn the language because there is no use for it. We can't go to our own different country to speak that one language, there aren't jobs that require the Lakota language, and you won't be able to make a living off our Lakota traditions. Most parents didn't teach it to their children because when they went to boarding school they weren't allowed to speak it.

During the boarding school years the kids were punished for speaking their language. The Catholic teachers thought they were saving the little Lakota children because they were making the "savages" civilized. The truth was that they were taking away that entire generation's identity as Lakota people.

Learning the Lakota language gives you something to be proud of. It gives you an identity and makes you, you! You may not be able to make any money off our traditions, but you will be rewarded with culture. Your culture is a part of you, if you let it be!

We need to do something now

Dear Editor,

My name is Louise Rabbit and I'm a student at St. Francis Indian School. I'm writing to you about our Lakota Language. Our Lakota language is dying out slowly and it is not good. Students in high school and middle school should at least know some Lakota, but they don't. I think that Lakota language should be taught more in school.

If it was to be taught in school, fewer people would be in gangs and there would be less suicide. This is because young people would know more about their identity, and not be ashamed of who they are. It's good when students speak Lakota, because the elders like to hear younger people speak Lakota. They say that it is like an Indian being born again. Our Lakota language has a chance at being saved if we do something about it now.

Finding My Voice

By Dana Lonehill

You make mama proud

Dana Badmilk

There is a sign on the side of the road on the way to Kyle. I think some class from the school or something put it up. I'm not sure. This is nothing against anyone that put the sign up but I smile when I pass it. It says proudly in school colors.

"Striving To Be Violence Free."

I thought it was funny the first time I saw it. When the two reporters from The Observer Magazine were here, because when they saw it, the photographer hit the brakes and took pictures of the sign. All kinds of pictures of the sign. My uncle was like "What is he taking pictures of?" I said "That sign."

He was like "Why?"

I was like "Read it, it's funny."

He read it and laughed. The sarcastic Jerry Seinfeld or Amiotte or Lone Elk humor came out in me, I was like "Is it that hard to be violence free? I mean are the people that put this sign up trying hard not to run back and kick it. For real, what's wrong with Striving For Excellence or Striving for Hope or why not Striving to Be Non Violent."

So that sign this week made me think of my kids and their heroes, plus my friend Ron was giving me ideas of what to write about last week over football.

I have two sons, ages 13 and 14.

They have the same birthday, so next week they will be 14 and 15, 6 days before Christmas.

I am and have always been the custodial parent, being there on holidays and birthdays. I was there for every ER room visit, stitches, flu's, colds, scraped knees, Christmas parties, Halloween costumes, ...every trial and tribulation in their life. even when I made their Halloween costumes that they didn't want to wear.

I was there for the good, the bad and the ugly. Even the ugly that caused me to leave their father.

I watched and still watch my boys grow into men, watch them in amazement that I carried their precious souls in my womb for 9 months. I made them with their father, but even more important I made them into the men they are today.

Today they are taller than me, look down their noses at me and try to smack talk. Yet, I know and they know they have so much respect for me, sometimes I feel the tears coming thinking of how good they are.

They could be out being hoods, but that are so goal oriented in the name of sports, they don't care to be little hoods. They must strive to be violence free, I guess.

So I am mildly disappointed when their sports heroes are jail bound. Well one, Jalen's hero, Michal Vick was sentenced to 23 months in prison. I bought him posters and shirts of Vick and now he is going to prison. My son still has faith in the fact that he will come back to his glory in the NFL.

Barry Bonds pleaded Not Guilty for perjury the other day, so he isn't for sure jail bound, but still, he is my oldest boy's hero and has been since my son was age 6. I slightly tease them about the fact that their heroes are hoods. But I try not to rub it in.

It's hard to see my kids so loving sports that they behave themselves in the hopes of playing at the next level, only to have their heroes jail bound.

If only they didn't grow up and start liking teams different than mine and grew opinions. If only they were Yankee and Vikings fans they would not have had heroes on their way to jail.

I remember when my sons first made a Myspace page, I made one too so I can keep an eye on them. I went to my oldest boy's page and under the category My Heroes there was a picture of me. I even got a little tear in my eye. So in writing this column, I go to see if I am still under that category on his page, only to find out I have been replaced by Derrick Brooks.

Oh well, at least he's free.

So even though I think that the sign on the side of the road is funny, maybe we really all are Striving To Be Violence Free, even the rich and famous, and the sarcastic and poor.

BTW, even though they told me not to do it, Happy Birthday to Ty and Jalen Dixon, future heroes of the Pine Ridge Thorpe Football Team. You make mama proud.

Notes From Indian Country

By Tim Giago

They stopped drinking 'for the children's sake'

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The day was gray and overcast. Light snow had been drifting down all morning and it was shaping up into one of those cold, miserable days that make South Dakota the butt of so many jokes.

As I nursed my second cup of coffee that morning, through the foggy, steamed up window of Vesta's Café in Martin, SD., I saw the old, maroon pickup of Enos Poor Bear driving slowly down the slushy street. A smile came to my face as I thought about the many mornings Enos sat with me at this very table and discussed the politics of the Pine Ridge Reservation over a steaming cup of coffee. Enos, the former president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, a respected elder, had a wealth of knowledge about people and the problems of the reservation, past and present, and loved to share his thoughts.

His silver gray hair was always neatly combed and his clothes were always pressed and clean. "It is something I learned from my Momma a long, long time ago. When I was a little shaver growing up in the Eagle Nest District at Wamblee, like most reservation families, we were dirt poor. But Momma always told us that no matter how old or tattered our clothes got, we should always keep then neat and clean. I've always honored her wishes," Enos would say.

"It seems to me that the youngsters of today have lost the ability to sit and listen to the stories and the advice of the tribal elders. The one virtue stressed by the elders is patience and that doesn't seem to fit into this world of instant gratification and high technology," was one of his favorite comments.

As I watched the lights of Christmas blinking in the store windows across the street my thoughts strayed to an elderly Lakota man who had passed away yesterday. He was a very close friend of Poor Bear and he had sat with me at this very table a week before he died and talked to me about the many things he had experienced in his long life.

The elderly man's face was lined with the creases of the many winters of toil and his fingers were brown from the many cigarettes he had held. He made a loud, slurping noise when he drank his hot coffee and it reminded me so much of my own Lakota father who knew it was not ill-mannered to sip loudly or to burp over a well-cooked meal or a great cup of coffee because that was the Lakota way of saying, "Hey, this is great."

Speaking softly as he brushed a shock of snow-white hair from his weathered forehead he said, "There are those young Indians who call God a white man's God. But I think there is one God for everybody. As a Lakota, I think Christmas is the best example of this."

"To me Christmas is a holiday that cuts across all races. It is a day to pause and to reflect on the past. It is a day to share with your loved ones. It is a day to carry on the traditions that have always been a part of our Sioux heritage, the traditional giving of gifts," the old man said as he stared into his coffee cup.

Like the Lakota of old, he used his hands to strengthen every word. "Many years ago my wife and me, we were very heavy drinkers. We got drunk often and neglected our children. We were really destroying our lives and worse yet, we were ruining the future for our little ones. Lakota men and women drink for many reasons and the loss of self-esteem is probably one of the biggest reasons," he said with a sigh.

The old man was quiet for a long time as if trying to gather his thoughts and talk about something he found difficult to discuss. "One night - - - it was Christmas Eve - - - my children had all come home from the Indian boarding school for the holidays. I had been drinking all week and I was pretty sick. My wife was sitting in the kitchen still drinking. I guess I was feeling guilty as well as sick because I walked to the room where my youngest daughter sleeps to tuck her in. Just as I got to the door I heard her talking. No, she wasn't talking. She was praying. She asked Tunkasila (Grandfather God) not to bring her a lot of fancy presents for Christmas. All she wanted was for God to make Mom and Dad stop drinking. She told God she loved us very much and to please save us for the children's sake."

The elderly man was silent for a long time again. When he spoke he said, "It was very cold that night, but I walked outside and stood there shivering and looking at the millions of stars just thinking about the things my little girl said. I felt the tears running down my face and I started to pray. All of a sudden the sky lit up like it was daylight and I got this warm, safe feeling all over. I think I heard this voice repeat the words of my daughter 'for the children's sake' but I wasn't afraid."

A tear came to his eye as he finished what he wanted to tell me. "Momma and me, we quit drinking that night. We never touched another drop of alcohol since that day. All of our children grew up and never got into trouble. Two of them graduated from college and all of the others have good jobs and are responsible Lakota people. My youngest daughter went to college and then came home to take care of me and Momma."

For the sake of the children he had found peace and comfort in Tunkasila that cold, Christmas Eve long ago. And whether one believes in Christmas or not, it is their choice, and I am only relating to you a story that is true and was told to me many years ago on an Indian reservation in South Dakota.

December thoughts and remembering Nate Witt

David Rooks

When I learned of Nate Witt's passing I paused a moment to reflect. It's a curious attribute, reserved to humans, that at such moments we are able to stretch a canvas of silence in our hearts and let memory paint its recollections. Of course, I remembered something I had long ago forgotten.

Back when I was ten or eleven Nate Witt was a scoutmaster in the Boy Scouts in Pine Ridge village.

It was how I met him. I wanted to join and he gave me a handbook and said I had to memorize the oath and a few principles of scouting. He was such a gentle man, I was eager to do well.

Subsequently we'd meet once or twice a week in the way old gym near the entrance to the OCS campus. That first summer, I and several other Pine Ridgers attended a jamboree at Camp Broad Axe back up somewhere behind Hill City.

There was target shooting with .22 rifles, archery, cliff climbing and even a tug of war against other scouts. It was a young boy's dream and adventure. And we owed it all to Nate Witt.

He was like that, quiet, unassuming - a true Ikce Wicasa.

Like many my age, I have watched the steady pilfering of our Lakota elders by time for several decades now. There is a way about them, a diamond light of humility and integrity that seems irreplaceable.

Yet the steady attrition of their memories, of their gentle glances and soft laughter of good will continues. And the Oyate are irrevocably diminished.

This seems truer in the winter. Perhaps there is an age when the spirit tells the body to prepare for the inevitable migration. When bone bleached and denuded trees stand barren along the creek banks, flanked everywhere by an early snow that promises many more, some signal is sent.

At last it is time.

I know now what my grandparents carried that creased their faces with character. In a prayer bundle in their hearts they kept the memory of all those they missed when they arose to greet the day. It is the calm sadness of elders who remember more loved ones gone than those still present.

Well before their passing, their feet are planted in two worlds: the spirit and the here. And, annually, when the spring Pow Wows return a place is reserved in every reunion to remember those no longer with us. It seems tradition is the testing of how we remember and respect, of how we hold on to the hidden half of us.

But this morning spring is still a ways off. Out my window the trees are sentries at attention in a wintry field.

A pink ribbon of light haloes the Seven Sisters to the east.

Dawn breaks, and like most others I begin with the soft tug of memories of those I've known. Added to them in the soft lit pantheon today is Nate Witt. I raise my coffee a moment, and thank him for everything.

Better late than never, I hope.

Parade of lights marks holiday season

MISSION - The parade of lights held on Saturday evening through town signaled the final two weeks of the holiday season before Christmas and the coming New Year. The theme of this year's parade was "Christmas on the Rosebud" as the town joined with Sinte Gleska University in sponsoring the event.

Despite a cold winter evening with the temperature in the teens the streets were lined with vehicles as folks came out of their homes to take part.

The parade featured a relative small number of entrants, however, the event quickly achieved its purposes as the night was likely quite cold for the youngsters who rode on the floats.

For the first time a large lighted Christmas tree was placed on Main Street to complete the holiday décor, while the conclusion of the parade saw at least a hundred people lined up for hot chocolate.

All in all, the parade appeared to be a success as many local people turned out in support of the city's effort to bring the business and local community together.

Mission and Antelope Horizons Project host artist market

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

MISSION - Several co-sponsors hosted a "Multi-Cultural Arts & Crafts Market" at the multipurpose building on the campus of Sinte Gleska University on Saturday, Dec. 8. Leo Campbell, Horizons project coordinator, said the frigid weather and the turnout of some 300 people was unexpected.

The Horizons Project is a poverty reduction program and designed by the Northwest Area Foundation.

SGU and Sitting Bull College co-hosted the event while the Northwest Area Foundation provided funds; several community partnerships have been established in order to meet the outcomes of the project.

One of the goals of the communities Horizons Project for the artist's market is to create, build, and strengthen marketing opportunities for local and regional artists and crafts people and leadership development.

The artist's market attracted 26 artists including a couple of food vendors. The artists were not charged any fees to set up their tables; however, they did have to pay a $10 fee to the Rosebud Sioux Tribe revenue department. For those who already purchased a tribal business license there was no fee charged.

Campbell and another local volunteer, Chris Stewart have been spearheading the local Horizons project which has outlined a number of future projects, including a beautification project in and around the Antelope Lake campus area and a youth project. Building other collaborations with the state and community is another goal.

Many turned out on Saturday to see the arts and crafts market. Mike Marshall creates parfleche work.

Some of the project's community partners contributed to the artist's market, including the SGU media department which videotaped some of the artist's work. The Rosebud Economic Development Corporation will help with a web based directory for the local project and St. Francis Mission will assist with a DVD that will contain artist information collected by Carole Good Shield of SGU.

Sicangu artist, Mike Marshall and wife, Lynette, were most representative of the type of fine art work that people have come to expect from the area. Marshall earned a Bachelor of fine arts from SGU and spends time creating beautiful parfleche work. His beautiful deer hide boxes with older and more authentic traditional colors appeared to be selling well according to Lynette. The Marshall family has traveled locally to other artists markets including one in Sioux City, Iowa where some of his work is displayed.

The Horizons project is part of a larger regional project and Campbell reports that Daphne Richards-Cook of Rapid City is a coach for the local project and assists with envisioning novel activities while the local project conducts the analyses of community consensus. Campbell noted that SGU provides the Horizons project with office space at the Hattie Marcus building in downtown Mission.

Suicide Warning Signs

Seek help as soon as possible by contacting a mental health professional or by calling the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 1-800-273-TALK if you or someone you know exhibits any of the following signs:

- Threatening to hurt or kill oneself or talking about wanting to hurt or kill oneself
- Looking for ways to kill oneself by seeking access to firearms, available pills, or other means
- Talking or writing about death, dying, or suicide when these actions are out of the ordinary for the person
- Feeling hopeless
- Feeling rage or uncoltrolled anger or seeking revenge
- Acting reckless or engaging in risky activities-seemingly without thinking
- Feeling trapped-like there's no way out
- Increasing alcohol or drug use
- Withdrawing from friends, family, and society
- Feeling anxious, agitated, or unable to sleep or sleeping all the time
- Experiencing dramtic mood changes
- Seeing no reason for living or having no sense of purpose in life.

What to Do If You Think a Person Is Having Suicidal Thoughts

You cannot predict death by suicide, but you can identify people who are at increased risk for suicidal behavior, take precautions, and refer them for effective treatment.

Ask the person directly if he or she is 1) having suicidal thoughts/ideas 2) Has a plan to do so, and 3) Has access to lethal means.

- "Are you thinking about killing yourself?"
- "Have you ever tried to hurt yourself before?"
- "Do you think you might try to hurt yourself today?"
- "Have you thought of ways that you might hurt yourself?"

▶ This won't increase the person's suicidal thoughts. It will give you information that indicates how strongly the person has thought about killing him or herself.

▶ Take seriously all suicide threats and all suicide attempts. A past history of suicide attempts is one of the strongest risk factors for death by suicide.

▶ There is no evidence that "no-suicide contracts" prevent suicide. In fact, they may give counselors a false sense of reassurance.

Listen and Look for red flags for suicidal behavioir, indicated by the mnemonic:

IS PATH WARM?

Ideation -Threatened or communicated
Substance abuse -Excessive or increased
Purposeless -No reason for living
Anxiety -Agitation/Insomnia
Trapped -Feeling there is no way out
Hopelessness
Withdrawing -From friends,family,society
Anger -(uncontrolled)-Rage,seeking revenge
Recklessness -Risky acts, unthinking
Mood changes (dramatic)

NIEA president: $2.4 billion backlog in school facilities

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Robert Cook, an award-winning Rapid City educator, has been elected president of the National Indian Education Association, the largest and oldest American Indian education advocacy group.

Cook was elected in October at NIEA's annual conference in Hawaii, and as president-elect will spend the coming year organizing the next conference to be held in Seattle on Oct. 23-26, 2008. At the end of that conference, he will assume the presidency for one year.

Cook, who has been serving on the NIEA board for more than a year, said, "We provide advocacy and lobbying in Washington, D.C., to ensure that our American Indian education programs have the quality … and are entitled to the funding that Congress has promised through our treaties."

Robert Cook

Currently, certain programs to enhance education such as Title I, for low-income students; Title VII, for Native students; Johnson-O'Malley Act funds, for cultural enrichment programs; and the Indian schools building fund have been cut or are in danger of being cut, Cook said.

"I know right now there's about a $2.4 billion backlog on funding on Indian schools, and so we want to make sure the government lives up to their promises to provide quality facilities for our Indian kids," Cook said.

Some programs are bundled into a Health and Human Services package that was passed by Congress but vetoed by George Bush, Cook said. A challenge to the veto failed in the House by two votes, and now a compromise is under discussion, he said.

"That's one of the things that we're trying to do is make people aware, to write their congressional leaders to make sure that those programs are funded at the full levels," Cook said.

Cook left an 18-year-career as a classroom teacher last year and joined Crazy Horse Memorial as a cultural affairs specialist.

He said his new employment allows more time for his activities in NIEA. It also brings in an audience of a million visitors a year for interpretive programs to inform people "that we still have our unique issues and diverse cultural needs, that we're not a museum piece, that we continue to struggle with the loss of our languages," he said.

Cook has received awards that include the Milken Award in 2005 and NIEA Teacher of the Year in 2006. He lives in Rapid City with his wife Rapid City School Board member Daphne Richards-Cook, and two children.

NIEA was founded in 1969 and has 5,000 members, Cook said.

Pass Creek community unites in healing ceremony

By Jodi Richards
American Horse School

ALLEN - A candle light vigil prayer service was held for the Pass Creek community members who are experiencing grief and trauma. The purpose was to acknowledge the pain and suffering the families are experiencing and allow them to release that pain and begin the healing process with the support of friends, family, and the community. The vigil began at the Pass Creek CAP Office with community members and fourth to eighth grade American Horse School students, their teachers, and assistants. Pass Creek Community members were smudged while the drum, Hermus Bettelyoun, Quentin Red Bear, John DuBray, Jonas Bear Heels, Santana Trejo, sang the four directions song. Steve DuBray Sr. gave prayers and Lydia Bear Killer spoke to the students and community members.

Community members walked to the school where dinner was provided by AHS school board, and Gloria Coats-Kitsopoulos, principal. After dinner the students and community members went into the gym where Native Era provided the entertainment. A part of lighting the candles and prayers was to share information on depression, suicide and alcohol and drug abuse. Wiconi waste is to share sacred life within the circle of life. Lyle Noisy Hawk Sr. and his son Lyle Jr., Terry Blue-White Eyes, the director of Anpetu Luta Otipi, John Two Bulls, and Dennis Janis shared life experiences with suicide, drug and alcohol abuse and hope for a brighter abuse free future!

Students read literature handed out at a candle light vigil ceremony last week.

The gymnasium was filled to capacity, community members not only received prayers, a meal, and inspirational speakers. Pamphlets on suicide, drugs and alcohol abuse, and depression were handed out, and many gifts were given out in the form of a raffle.

The Pass Creek District is committed to continue prevention for suicide, and drug and alcohol on a monthly basis. They need 15 members to act on the Question, Persuade and Respond Training to begin a 'phone tree' and continue services for the Pass Creek Community.

Thanks go out to Lydia Bear Killer, The American Horse School Board, Gloria Coats-Kitsopoulos, Julie Bad Wound, who organized the students that attended, James Cross, Elaine Martinez, Steve DuBray, John DuBray, Officers Pete Plenty Bull and Paul Forney of Oglala Sioux Tribe Public Safety, Francis Big Crow, Jack and Lisa Dillion, OST Health Administration, Anpetu Luta Otipi, and Native Era for making the evening informative, fun, and the beginning of a positive and healthy new year.

Porcupine School now officially named Pahin Sinte Owayawa

PORCUPINE - Porcupine School is now "Pahin Sinte Owayawa." The Porcupine School Board made the decision in their October meeting of this year. The outer shell of the new school building is nearing completion and on target to be finished by January, 2008. Work will then begin on the interior of the school. The sign for the new building will be “Pahin Sinte Owayawa".

The school Christmas program is scheduled for Wednesday, Dec. 12 at 10 a.m. with individual class Christmas parties scheduled for Tuesday, Dec. 18 followed by regular dismissal. Winter Break begins for students on Wed., Dec. 19 with school resuming after the new year on Jan. 3, 2008.

Students have been encouraged to learn basic study skills. The difference between a successful student and one who's not successful may be as simple as using these study skills. These skills typically cover four areas: Set goals, Organize time, Ask questions, measure progress.

Completing homework is another area where students and parents are encouraged to work together to have a less, hassle-free study time. Since these hassles can affect the entire family. Four simple steps could help eliminate this homework stress.

1. Establish a homework time as students benefit from a routine. While some students work best right after school, others do better right before or after dinner. Parents should give their students a choice but insist on the routine.

2. Insist that homework time happens every day and this will solve the problem of the student saying "I did that at school." Even if the child truly has no homework, he or she can do math problems or reading for practice. This is time well spent to help your student do better in school.

3. As your child ask questions when he says he doesn't understand something. For example, instead of explaining the math, ask, "How did you solve that last math problem? Could you do that here too?"

4. Don't ever do his/her homework for them. One way the teacher sees how much your child is actually learning is by checking their homework. This helps her determine if she needs to re-teach something.

Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort:
Rusty Puckett is the definition of an entrepreneur

By Ivan Sorbel
Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce

KYLE - The Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce has named Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort as their business of the month for December 2007.

Rusty Puckett has taken a monstrous leap in economic development by building and opening the first motel in the Kyle area. This is only the second attempt at a motel business on the Pine Ridge Reservation in history.

Rusty has worked all of his life as a rancher and construction worker. He and his family raise beef cattle on the Pine Ridge Reservation and he has worked for and with his father's drywall company, Puckett Construction, for many years.

Rusty took a major step as an entrepreneur by purchasing the old Stables Motel in Rapid City. He moved three sections of the building to Kyle and built a fourth section as a dinning area, meeting room, front desk and art gallery. After putting the four sections together he found there was much damage to the building due to the Rapid City flood. There had been water damage to the pipes, wiring and boilers. Already with much of his savings and paychecks pouring into this project, the water damage posed yet another financial burden. With perseverance Rusty was able to overcome many obstacles including infrastructure needs such as water and sewer, insurance, heating and cooling and beautification and resurrection of an old building.

In January 2006, almost a year into the project, Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort was forced to open at least a portion of the building. The Oglala Sioux Tribe had sustained a devastating emotional strike as one of its members was killed in action in Iraq. A young Marine was being transported home to Kyle for funeral services. A Marine detachment was traveling from Denver, Colo. and many family members were in need of lodging. The Puckett family was in full force and made ready for its first customers. Feeling the need to provide a service for the distraught family, people worked night and day to open half of the motel. Since this time the motel has been open to the public and is doing business on a daily basis.

The economic impact of this project is yet to be determined. What is known is the need for the service on the Pine Ridge. There have been many attempts at lodging businesses such as bed and breakfasts on the reservation. Although these businesses are filling some of the need and are worthwhile businesses none have made the big move to a full motel.

Rusty Puckett received an award from PRACC at the annual chamber banquet in July.

Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort complements the existing businesses in the Kyle area as well as those on the Pine Ridge Reservation. With the addition of the motel to this community many business opportunities are now possible and obtainable. The motel eliminates the 90 mile drive to and from Rapid City for those with an agenda in the Kyle area. Not only a very comfortable room to let and nice place to dine the motel offers meeting space, which is deficient in the area.

During the summer of 2007, Lakota Prairie has added six more motel units, four cabins and an office rental. Additional street lights have been installed to make the parking lot more comfortable. Rusty's dream is far from complete. He has plans to add camping, RV camping and RV dump to complement the motel. The master plan is to accommodate any type of traveler and visitor to the Pine Ridge Reservation. Lakota Prairie is already a beautiful ranch resort and the possibilities are endless.

After one year of operation Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort rented approximately 3,000 rooms. The meeting room held over 100 scheduled meetings. Many meetings were not counted, as they were less than a day. The restaurant serves up to 100 meals a day. All of this revenue and service is staying here and is not lost to towns off the reservation. The motel paid over $6,000 in sales tax for 2006.

Lakota Prairie currently has 12 employees. In the peak of the summer they employed as many as 28 people at one time. Creating jobs in an area that has up to 60 percent unemployment is a major accomplishment.

Rusty Puckett is the definition of entrepreneur. He has financed this project completely on his own through conventional loans, non-conventional loans, labor trade, savings, work profits, sweat and tears. He is admired by many and is living proof business on the Pine Ridge Reservation can exist and thrive.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have a couple of questions for you. First of all I want to know what is going on with my body? It doesn't feel right? Is there a man out there for me? Will I ever get my life together? Please help!

My life

Dear My Life:

Okay. Do you think that I am a pill you can swallow and get all better? Dear one, you are depressed.

That causes: back aches, body aches and pains, tiredness, etc. You need more sunshine (buy full spectrum light bulbs), regular exercise, to avoid too much sugar, and a balance of sodium and lithium. Go to Hot Springs, to Kidney Springs, (right across from that grand and glorious old hotel on the top side of downtown, bring some bottles and collect natural springs water.

Drink that, four glasses a day. Drink one glass of room temperature coke or diet coke. Take vitamin B complex. If you are compatible with Gingo Biloba, take that for the strong anti-oxidants or try grape seed or pine seed extract (in capsule form). Your life will get in better order when you feel better. So do the above things to feel better. Don't forget to eat better.

Of course there is a man out there for you. But, I honestly ask you, what man would want a woman that doesn't have her life together and feels sick all the time?

Get well, then get the man. He will be there when you are in better balance. He is a school teacher so sharpen up your mind a bit and get ready for him.

Dear Anna,

I was wondering if you can help me with some advice or answers about my relationship with my kid's father. We have two children and they both love him very much.

He's been a good dad and does everything for them. It's been 11 years and it's mostly about abuse, cheating and lying between us. My heart is so broken from this, I can't forgive and forget cause it's the same thing over and over with the same people.

Every attempt I made to end the relationship, he stalked and harassed me until I would give up and go back to him. He ended up in jail and promised he will change when he came home. It didn't happen. He had to go to treatment and promised to change, it didn't happen either.

Now he's in prison and will be gone for two years. He calls me everyday to tell me he loves me and things will get better when he comes home.

He wants me to wait for him because he will change. I don't believe him, I want to move on cause I feel this relationship was over eight years ago. Before he left he told our son to make sure I don't go anywhere without him or have a boyfriend and my son listens to me when I walk with other adults and listens to my phone calls. I want to move on. Should I wait for him? Will he change? Will my kids be okay if we moved on? Will I ever meet someone who will make us happy?

Wanting to know

Dear Wanting to know:

There is a fine line between a sense of obligation and love. You feel, somehow, obligated to your soon to be ex. We don't have to live with or be married to everyone that we have compassion for.

You have already had a lot of miserable years. You have been reasonable in your tolerance hoping that this man would recover. He wore you out. You are emotionally exhausted from him. If you want my permission, then okay, go out and date. Tell your son to MYOB, that he is not the Gestapo for his father, and to quit acting like it. Explain to him that you just can't help it, but you just don't have it for his dad like you used to. That you have a right to go on, and someday, when his dad gets out from under his bad behavior, maybe you can look at him again, but maybe not.

You already have made up your mind. You made it up before he went to prison. Just accept how you feel, and get going mom. A word or two of advice: You have already experienced what you don't want, do not try and find another man in that same pool, in other words, stay out of bars. Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

I am writing in a bit of confusion right now, I am attending school but I have a problem, I am going to have to travel daily or move, I want to move on one hand and the other I don't want to leave my place of employment.

Do you see me moving as a good idea or will it be best if I stay and drive and keep working. If you think it's better for me to stay, do you see me getting a new car?

The other thing I know my spouse has been messing around but I want to know who with and he is claiming he doesn't remember, is this true?

And does he really want to stay with me? I have recently spent some time with another person do you see that going anywhere? I love my spouse, don't get me wrong but he has a lot of issues he needs to work on and I am getting hurt in the process, what do you see for me?

Confused

Dear Confused:

How exhausted are you going to get going to school, driving and working? Can you rearrange something? The answer is yes, you have at least three choices: keep your job and quit your education, move and continue your education and get a different job close to your school, or continue to do what you are doing and end up in the hospital with some sort of real problem.

I vote for moving, changing jobs and continuing on with your education.

Get a leave of absence from your job, if possible, so that a job may be there when you graduate.

At least leave there on good terms so that they may want to rehire you if you want to move back.

What do you mean what is her name? Who Cares. Her name is Who Cares.

Men date her all the time. She doesn't care and they don't care either. Leave the man, the problem of Who Cares in the background, and get a healthy relationship attitude.

It may take a while to find a healthy relationship because it requires two major ingredients: a healthy man mind/spirit and a healthy woman mind/spirit. Right now, you definitely don't have a healthy man/mind spirit in your life, and somehow it's affected the woman mind/spirit in a negative way.

Having an affair will definitely jazz up your wardrobe, your makeup, your fitness, and all that is external, but what is it doing to your sense of who you are. You understand the risks, but what are you really saying.

It looks to me that you want to end your marriage because that is what you are doing. If you want to stay with the guy that can't remember her name, then do that, but I see you blowing up your marriage, getting divorced after a bunch of arguing, and feeling mean and angry for quite a while. I think you can do it a better way.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

PINE RIDGE - Nathaniel Witt Jr. - Topa Heyu Ciya (Dismounts Four Times) Nathaniel Witt died at age 82 on Dec. 4.

He was a Lakota man who lived his life for his family, community, church and country. He was born on March 16, 1925. As the oldest child of Nathaniel Witt Sr. and Minnie Distribution, he grew up in the Wanblee area with his siblings. His siblings are: Eugenia Bettelyoun-Wanblee, Lawrence-Tahoka, Texas, Frances (deceased), Mary Ann (deceased), Sidney-Pine Ridge, Nelson, Waldport, Oregon, Patrick, Spearfish; Wayne, Oglala, Nora Lou (deceased), Floretta Harter-Hot Springs, Bill (deceased), Sandra-Rapid City, Rebecca Benton-Pine Ridge, James (deceased), and Lyle-Hot Springs. He completed elementary school at Holy Rosary Mission (Red Cloud Indian School) and was ultimately granted an honorary High School Diploma in May 2005. Nathaniel shared 57 years of marriage to Eva Goes In Center. They raised nine children; Jhon Duane Goes In Center, Deborah (Chris Bordeaux), Angie (John Stover), Michael (deceased), Geraldine Goes In Center, Margaret Ann Witt, Christopher (Lillian), Mary Witt, and Nancy Miller, 23 grandchildren: 11 boys (1 deceased) 12 girls (1 deceased) and 19 great-grandchildren 9 boys and 10 girls. Nathaniel entered the United States Army in 1943 at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. with the 25th Division 35th Infantry, Regiment 1st Battalion B Company. He completed his basic training at Camp Roberts, Calif. and trained as a Rifleman and hand to hand combat and was sent overseas on a ship called 'The New Amsterdam" (4th largest ship in the world).

From this ship he was re-assigned to the Battleship called the Andrew Jackson and went to New Caledonia, New Guinea, the Philippines and Japan. He was on this ship when the Bomb was dropped at Hiroshima and the ship was anchored off shore of Japan. He was honorable discharged in 1946. He served 13 years in the National Guard before retiring from active military service. Nathaniel was employed as a Heavy Equipment Operator at Igloo Army Depot for 14 years, before moving and working as a Bus Driver both at American Horse School and Oglala Community School, transferring to the BIA Building and Utilities.

When he retired from the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) he worked for the Oglala Sioux Tribe as the Director of the Water and Sewer; ultimately running a successful Auto Shop and auto salvage business. Nathaniel participated in many civic organizations in his lifetime. These organizations include serving as Oglala Community School Board member and Boys Scout Leader for the Oglala Community School.

A significant amount of his civic work includes active membership of American Legion Post 251 where he served in many roles including Commander and Finance Officer. During this time of Post 251, he made sure that High School Seniors for both OCS and Red Cloud attended Boys and Girls State in Aberdeen. He began a tradition of putting the American Flags up for all legal holidays on the main street of Pine Ridge. He continued his membership for 40 years where he operated BINGO for the legion to raise funds for the students to attend Boys and Girls state and the Sacred Heart Church to help raise funds for the church activities.

He was a member of the Knights of Columbus and an active member of the Pine Ridge Sacred Heart Catholic Church by being an usher, being a member of the choir, and other duties as needed.

He was elected to the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council and was a member of the Health Education and Welfare Committee for the OST and during this time he was on the Flandreau Indian School Board. He was the Election Judge for the Oglala Sioux Tribe for several years. He always supported his children/grandchildren/great grandchildren, nieces and nephews by attending their activities and become an avid sports fan attending both Pine Ridge Thorpes and Red Cloud Crusader games; he was very dedicated to supporting children-students in their activities.

Motion by Hutchison, seconded by Roubideaux to approve the following tax certificate. All voting yes, the motion carried.

SHANNON COUNTY

RESOLUTION #2007-06

Resolution Reinstating Sale of Tax Certificates.

WHEREAS, since 1897 the State of South Dakota has authorized counties to sell tax certificates on unpaid delinquent property taxes, and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in 2006 adopted a law prohibiting such sale after July 1, 2006, and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in 2007 decided that it should be up to the individual counties to decide whether or not they will sell tax certificates; and

WHEREAS, the ability to sell tax certificates will allow Shannon County more flexibility in its collection of delinquent property taxes;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the Shannon County Commission in accordance with SDCL 10-23-28.1 hereby waives the provisions of said Section 10-23-28.1 that prohibits the sale of tax certificates.

Passed and approved this 7th Day of December, 2007.

Motion by Roubideaux, seconded by Hutchison to set Supplemental Hearing and Contingency Transfers for December 28th, 2007, at 11:10 a.m. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Motion by Hutchison, seconded by Roubideaux, to set the January, 2008 meeting on January 4th, 2008. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Lynn Bettelyoun, Highway Superintendent, met with the Board to discuss highway business. Updated of graveling on Kyle Road. Bettelyoun said they have put 602 tons of gravel on the road, fixing ruts, etc. Bettelyoun also stated that they have put 607 Tons of gravel on the Wounded Knee Road. Stated they would use 1500 tons of gravel when done with road. Bettelyoun said all road have been hit and will start going back and doing more extensive work. The Denby road will be having yield and stop signs put on it. Hutchison asked why signs were needed and Bettelyoun said people do not stop or yield at the road crossing and this would cover the County for liability.

Bettelyoun said she would be storing data on CD's at Batesland.

Bettelyoun said the White Ford F250 was down and it was taken in to be checked out and was told the engine would probably only last another year, maybe 2, but thought the commission should think about getting something else before the truck quit altogether. Bettelyoun also wants to surplus the 1984 8000 Semi Truck and to sell and advertise for sealed bids.

Bettelyoun also stated that she wants to get back the right-of-way (66-feet) on the Kyle Road #13 and the Denby road so that they highway department can replace culverts, etc.

Discussion was held on problems with attempted break-ins, rocks being thrown at the trailer and not getting any law enforcement to help.

Bettelyoun gave the Commissioners her road condition report she has developed so that when she sends out someone to do work on a road it will be documented at to what to do and where.

Motion by Hutchison, seconded by Roubideaux to approve the change order #2, pay request #6 on Project P6688(00) P8057(00). All voting yes, the motion carried.

Lance Russell, States Attorney, met with the Board to discuss medical bills and other issues. Medical bills which had been submitted for payment of over $20,000.00 will be denied as investigation was showing the person has not lived in Shannon County since 2004 and that he is licensed in another county. Russell stated that Shannon County might have legal action taken against them, but his findings showed Shannon County is not responsible for this bill. Russell said he will do some more investigation on this.

Lance Russell discussed the application for Deputy Sheriff and that he needed more information on the applicant and he will talk to the Auditor about it.

Chippewa generosity brings gifts to head start students

KYLE - For the second year, the Saginaw Chippewa Indian Tribe of Michigan has provided Christmas gifts to the Oglala Lakota College's head start students through their Angel Tree Progrom.

For the past ten years, the Chippewa tribe has organized the program providing Christmas gifts for under-privileged Native American children.

For the last four years gifts were supplied to various organizations on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Last year the program supplied 344 gifts to the Head Start children and this year provided 456 gifts to the headstart children. The gifts were toys, winter coats and clothing. A video of the program can be viewed at www.saghchip.org.

The gifts were distributed to the students on Dec. 19 and 20 at the administration building at Kyle.

Floyd Westerman journeys on

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. – Well known Dakota singer and activist, Floyd Red Crow Westermann, 71, died at the Cedar Sinai Hospital on December 13. He was reportedly battling leukemia for an extended time period and had returned to South Dakota on several occasions in recent years to tend to his illness.

Born on the Sisseton-Wahpeton reservation in South Dakota, home of the Dakota, Westermann achieved fame over the course of a lifetime in film and music. After his debut 1969 album, "Custer Died for

Rounds wants to protect Bear Butte

PIERRE (AP) - Gov. Mike Rounds wants to spend more than $1 million to prevent developers from putting biker bars and other noisy businesses on ranch land near Bear Butte, a mountain on the northern edge of the Black Hills held sacred by many American Indian tribes.

In recent years, Indians from several tribes have sought to block development of land around the butte into campgrounds, bars and other sometimes rowdy ventures that interfere with religious use of the mountain, particularly during the annual sands of bikers to the area each August.

Saying he wants to protect the beauty and peace of the religious site, Rounds has proposed using state, federal and private money to buy a perpetual easement that would prevent commercial and residential development of some land on the western side of Bear Butte.

Indians working to protect Bear Butte praise the Republican governor's plan.

"Any kind of assistance from anybody in preserving the butte is welcome," said Gene Blue Arm, a Cheyenne River Sioux tribal member who has sought to limit development near the religious site.

RST language preservation project hosts discussion on Lakota language

MISSION - The Todd County School District graciously provided meeting space for a diverse number of local Lakota educators who are concerned about the need to revitalize, reclaim and teach the Lakota language. Dorothy LeBeau, School Improvement Coordinator and Leta Haukaas, Indian Studies Coordinator provided a delicious noon meal and essentially facilitated the discussion about Lakota language as initiated by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Lakota Language Preservation Project.

Philomon Two Eagle of the RST Resource Development Office, Robert Magelky, Assessment Coordinator at TCSD, Haukaas and LeBeau represented the school district, while Albert White Hat represented the Lakota Studies Department at Sinte Gleska University. Dr. Archie Beauvais, Director of the LLP Project along with LLP data clerk and researcher, Almona Kills In Water represented the LLP Project, while Carmen Eagle Pipe was also present later.

Beauvais offered a Lakota prayer prior to the discussion, while Haukaas handed out a copy of the district's level 1 list of Lakota words that students are required to know. Other increasingly difficult levels in Lakota will be completed in the future. Magelky who regularly surveys students concerning a wide range of issues throughout the school year provided some valuable insight into the need to be proactive teachers of Lakota and encouraging the family to continue to their part in the equation.

Magelky surveyed the students on their knowledge of the level 1 word list and a large majority of students across all grades did poorly on the word list.

Beauvais explained that the purpose of the

LNI to honor students, family has opportunity to give thanks

RAPID CITY - "When my little girl woke up in the hospital, she asked who saved me?" said Jodi Lofton, mother of a six year old found at the bottom of a swimming pool in Rapid City by three Wolf Creek basketball players, "Those three girls gave us a Christmas gift that we will never forget."

Three Wolf Creek ball players, in Rapid City for the Cougar Classic, walked into the pool at the Quality Inn on Saturday night, Dec. 1 and noticed a young girl lying on the bottom of the eight foot deep swimming pool. The three eighth graders hollered for help right away; Naomi Evans said she waited about three seconds before diving into the pool and grabbing the unconscious girl and

Arm said. "I think it's a good deal."

Dean Wink, a member of the Meade County Commission, said he opposes a perpetual easement that would block all future owners from considering other uses for the land. But he said he could support an easement that prohibits development for a decade or two.

"Forever is a long time," Wink said.

The governor made only a brief mention of the plan in his budget speech to the South Dakota Legislature, which is being asked to approve an emergency special spending measure for Bear Butte. The easement could help calm some worries about the mountain, Rounds said.

His plan would use $250,000 in state money, to be matched with $344,000 in private donations and a $594,000 grant from a federal program that protects agricultural land, to buy a perpetual conservation easement on some ranch land on Bear Butte's west side.

The ranch family could still use the land for agricultural purposes, but it could not be used for commercial or residential purposes. The easement also would mean the owners would continue to pay property taxes to Meade County and the local school district.

For centuries, members of the Lakota, Cheyenne and other tribes have been climbing Bear Butte to fast and hold religious ceremonies. Colorful prayer cloths hanging from trees line the path to the top of the mountain, which rises about 1,300 feet above the surrounding plain.

Named Mato Paha, or Bear Mountain, because it resembles a sleeping bear lying on its side, it was formed by volcanic rock that never erupted and was then exposed when surrounding land eroded.

The butte and the land immediately around it are in a state park that was sold to the state of South Dakota in 1962 for $50,000. Because of the growth of the motorcycle rally, land values in the area have skyrocketed.

In recent years there has been gatherings at Bear Butte and nearby Sturgis during the rally to protest motorcycle noise, loud concerts and alcoholic consumption near the mountain. The 2007 Legislature rejected a measure seeking to ban the issuance of liquor or beer licenses within four miles of the boundaries of the state park after lawmakers said they did not want to interfere with private property rights.

Wink said he expects the Legislature will have a good discussion on the governor's easement plan, but local residents believe the issue should be handled locally.

"They just think the private property rights and local control are more important," the county commissioner said.

Some also have questioned whether tax money should be used for such an easement, Wink said.

But Blue Arm said the sacred mountain must be protected because noise and traffic from the motorcycle rally and other events interfere with religious use of the area. When people go to the mountain to pray, they are exposed to the elements, which helps them find truth, he said.

"I'm saying yes to anything to stop further development around the butte," Blue Arm said. "In a ceremony or in prayer, there needs to be a solitude."

State Parks Director Doug Hofer said officials are negotiating with a family that owns 700 acres of land on the west side Bear Butte between the state park and state Highway 79.

"The biggest priority is a piece of land that goes right up the side of the butte. We don't own every acre of that mountain," Hofer said.

Some Sioux tribes and the U.S. Interior Department have been buying land near Bear Butte in recent years, and that land is not subject to property taxes, Hofer said.

Details will not be available until the legislative session opens in January, but it might cost up to $1 million to get the easement, Hofer said.

Lakota language

LLP Project is to survey the prevalence of Lakota language in the community, while planning a host of activities which will increase Lakota language use.

Two Eagle, who originally drafted the proposal for establishing the Lakota Language Preservation Project is very committed to furthering Lakota as he is often heard speaking to his school age children in Lakota. His desire is to see a research paper arise out of the discussions at hand, which can also be used for grant applications.

As the discussion continued about the need for skilled Lakota language teachers, White Hat said, "We need Lakota speakers to teach them how to teach Lakota…They can be fluent, but if they don't know the methods course they can't get certified." LeBeau noted that, "We don't emphasize Lakota language per se because of historical oppression. We are waiting for permission." LeBeau offered to do a presentation to RST directors and the council on historical oppression.

The meeting led to a lot of worthwhile discussion about Lakota and White Hat's description of certain words was new to some. He said, "Wakan is life, energy to a Lakota. It can give or destroy life. The good and evil is within that. 'Wakan' is understood and not a mystery. Wakan as 'sacred' is a Christian term." He went on to say, "The Lakota is a person of peace and harmony. Those who live by the pipe decided to be relations and those who did not are the ikce wicasa or common men."

Public service by students and after-school programs were listed as avenues to teach Lakota as well as community gatherings where children are given a meal and encouraged to learn Lakota. A "Talking Circle" in Lakota was suggested as a way to let students hear spoken Lakota, however, there was a need to change to name.

The group tentatively agreed to meet in January and noted that the discussion about teaching Lakota on the Rosebud reservation was worthwhile.

Suicide Warning Signs

Seek help as soon as possible by contacting a mental health professional or by calling the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 1-800-273-TALK if you or someone you know exhibits any of the following signs:

- Threatening to hurt or kill oneself or talking about wanting to hurt or kill oneself
- Looking for ways to kill oneself by seeking access to firearms, available pills, or other means
- Talking or writing about death, dying, or suicide when these actions are out of the ordinary for the person
- Feeling hopeless
- Feeling rage or uncoltrolled anger or seeking revenge
- Acting reckless or engaging in risky activities-seemingly without thinking
- Feeling trapped-like there's no way out
- Increasing alcohol or drug use
- Withdrawing from friends, family, and society
- Feeling anxious, agitated, or unable to sleep or sleeping all the time
- Experiencing dramtic mood changes
- Seeing no reason for living or having no sense of purpose in life.

What to Do If You Think a Person Is Having Suicidal Thoughts

You cannot predict death by suicide, but you can identify people who are at increased risk for suicidal behavior, take precautions, and refer them for effective treatment.

Ask the person directly if he or she is 1) having suicidal thoughts/ideas 2) Has a plan to do so, and 3) Has access to lethal means.

- "Are you thinking about killing yourself?"
- "Have you ever tried to hurt yourself before?"
- "Do you think you might try to hurt yourself today?"
- "Have you thought of ways that you might hurt yourself?"

This won't increase the person's suicidal thoughts. It will give you information that indicates how strongly the person has thought about killing him or herself.

IS PATH WARM?

Ideation -Threatened or communicated
Substance abuse -Excessive or increased
Purposeless -No reason for living
Anxiety -Agitation/Insomnia
Trapped -Feeling there is no way out
Hopelessness
Withdrawing -From friends,family,society
Anger -(uncontrolled)-Rage,seeking revenge
Recklessness -Risky acts, unthinking
Mood changes (dramatic)

Take seriously all suicide threats and all suicide attempts. A past history of suicide attempts is one of the strongest risk factors for death by suicide.

There is no evidence that "no-suicide contracts" prevent suicide. In fact, they may give counselors a false sense of reassurance.

again before the Fire and Rescue EMT's arrived to deliver Tiana Kuhluf to the hospital.

Tiana Kohlus, six years old and a kindergarten student at the Cheyenne Eagle Butte Primary School in Eagle Butte was taken to the Rapid City Regional Hospital where she spent a day in the intensive care unit and another day in the hospital because of water in her lungs. She was released on Monday and returned to Eagle Butte with her family.

"She's doing great now, she's a little comedian, she likes to dance and sing and she's back in school," said Lofton, "in fact she was back in school by Thursday, I wanted her to stay out the whole week but she insisted on going back to school, she loves school and up until her stay in the hospital she had perfect attendance."

Jodi described the three girls as guardian angels, we haven't met them yet but we are anxiously waiting for Friday when they will be honored at LNI and we will have a chance to meet them and thank them in person, said Lofton.

"It is hard to explain your feelings, you are relieved, you are guilty, you are scared," said Lofton, "you are emotional but very happy and because it was so traumatic for all of the kids each of them has done some counseling and will do some follow-up."

Tiana has older sisters K'lona, 11 and ReAnne, 9 and two older brothers, Grant 9, and Dayson 8. The family was also in Rapid City for the Cougar Classic, Grant and Dayson played on a team in the tournament.

Tiana and her parents Dean Kohlus and Jodi Lofton called Wolf Creek School on the day after Tiana got out of the hospital and by speaker phone personally thanked Naomi, Corina and Shawna.

The three students were honored by Wolf Creek School with certificates and Pendletons during an assembly and Naomi, who played on the Wolf Creek School A girls team that took fourth in the recent Big Foot Conference tournament hosted by American Horse School was honored with a song during halftime of the championship game.

The three students are set to be honored again during the Lakota Nation Invitational tournament on Friday, Dec. 21 at 1:30 p.m. in the arena. Tiana and her family plan to attend the honoring and meet the girls and personally thank them for their very special gift.

"No words can express how grateful we are for what they did for us," said Jodi, "we were happy and scared at the same time and it makes you appreciate the simple little things that make up our lives and that tie our families together."

Your Sins" he travelled the country extensively and often spoke out on indigenous issues. He was a member of the American Indian Movement and was often vocal about treaty issues.

In recent years, Westermann was regularly seen in the movies after establishing his music which was a mix of western and contemporary Native music. He played with other popular singers, including Willie Nelson, Jackson Browne and Kris Kristopherson during his career. His other albums included, "Indian Country" and "This Land is Your Mother."

He gained even more popularity in Indian Country with his tribute to Johnny Cash in 2006 and was a 2006 Native American Music Award winner for that tribute.

He was also known for his many movie appearances, including Hidalgo, Dances with Wolves, and Oliver Stone's "The Doors." His television credits include appearances on such hit shows as, MacGyver, Walker: Texas Ranger and Northern Exposure.

Wake services were held on the weekend on the Sisseton-Wahpeton reservation with funeral services held on Monday, December 17. A number of tributes to Westermann's life and his profile are available on the internet, including a story on South Dakota Public Radio by Vicky Wicks which will air on Wednesday at 6:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. MST.

Stanton to retire from top-level Indian Health Service job

PIERRE (AP) - Pierre native Mary Lou Stanton, the No. 4 person in charge of the Indian Health Service, says she's ready to retire after almost 42 years of government service.

Stanton, IHS deputy director, plans to retire and move to Phoenix to be near her family and spend more time with her grandchildren.

``It was a hard decision. Now that I made the decision to retire, I'm happy about it. I'll probably take a few community college courses, I do have a goal to learn Spanish; probably take some writing classes, maybe learn piano,'' Stanton said.

Stanton, a Sisseton Wahpeton Sioux, received the Director's National Honor Award for her years of service to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, which includes the Indian Health Service.

Stanton listed two keys to success:

``It's really important to set goals, and write them down, because when you write something down it kind of solidifies that,'' she said.

``Take risks. Don't be afraid to take risks, a lot of opportunities come our way, many people turn them down, because they are afraid they are not going to be able to do it."

She said accountability also is important. Most managers depend on it, she said.

Local residents attend Heartland Presidenial Forum

By Andrew Iron Shell
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - Community leaders from South Dakota tribal communities braved 14-hours of icy roads and blizzard conditions to attend the Dec. 1 Heartland Presidential Forum in Des Moines, Iowa. The Native American ambassadors were part of 3,800 individuals and faith communities gathered to promote a Community Values platform advocating grassroots unity verses the go it alone mentality that has been the dominate political agenda of our country.

This forum looked to address the division of America and promote an agenda that alone we can do so little and together we can do so much!

Five democratic presidential candidates heard firsthand the grassroots impact of failed health care, predatory activities of corporate America and weak immigration policies affecting the average American. Candidates heard stories from those affected and responded to questions in an atmosphere designed to promote open discussion. Sandy Swift Eagle of Rapid City noted to reporters afterwards that "true concerns of sovereign Tribal Nations are still being ignored by the United States government." Swift Eagle was passionate in speaking to the need for the next president to acknowledge their legal and moral responsibility to America's first citizens.

The Heartland Presidential Forum was attended in person by Connecticut Senator Chris Dodd, former Senator John Edwards of North Carolina, Illinois Senator Barack Obama and Ohio Representative Dennis Kucinich. New York Senator Hillary Clinton addressed community leaders by phone due in part to security concerns and inclement weather. Highlights noted in corporate mainstream media were the boos offered to Clinton after her response asking if she would commit to addressing responsible immigration reform within her first hundred days in office? Her reply, "it's up to Congress to pass such reform, but as president, I would do as much as possible".

The Des Moines Register's Dec. 1 Iowa poll had Sen. Obama leading the road to the white house by a slim three percent margin going into the Heartland Presidential Forum.

Republican candidates were invited with only businessman John Cox responding. Under federal law, a solo member of one party could not participate as it would appear to be an endorsement over other republican presidential candidates. Participating candidates were asked hard questions from real people on the negative affects of corporate hog farming and mining near rural communities, irresponsible funding towards children's health insurance systems and a true path way to citizenship for those looking to America to improve the quality of their lives.

Representative Kucinich gave an energetic answer on his plan to address America's appetite for coal.

He referenced a "full-employment economy" where everyone has a job, as well as affordable health care and education for all, from age 3 - college. Although Sen. Obama was the only candidate to acknowledge the Native American delegation off stage, Kucinich was the only one who directly mentioned Native Americans as he spoke to the negative manner in which mining companies do business in Indian country.

Representatives from South Dakota included community leader, Pat Spears of Lower Brule, Ben Long Wolf of Wanblee, MaryAnn Bear Heels-McGowen of Pierre, Shirley Iron Shell of Rosebud, and long time community activists Sandy Swift Eagle, Carla Rabbit-Schunk and Kay Allison of Rapid City. Andrew Iron Shell, representing the Western South Dakota Native American Organizing Project provided the closing blessing for the nationally broadcasted event. Local participants were able to attend through an empowerment grant given the WSD-NAOP from the Center for Community Change with collaboration from the Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, The Northwest Federation of Community Organizers, the South Dakota Food Bank and Dennis Osorio making this a successful venture for grassroots tribal communities.

The Heartland Presidential Forum was hosted by the Iowa Citizens for Community Improvement and an important part of the Campaign for Community Values, a multi-issue, multi-year effort to challenge the divisive messages of the right and to promote community values.

Sexual abuse case: LDS Church wants resolution before trial

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - A former Mormon missionary accused of molesting an American Indian boy in the 1960s denies the allegation, and the church wants a federal judge to decide the case before it goes to trial.

Ferris Joseph, 52, filed the civil lawsuit in U.S. District Court in South Dakota against the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and the Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of The Church of Latter-Day Saints, both of Utah.

He is suing the Mormon church, claiming he was sexually abused by one of its missionaries, Robert Lewis White, in the late 1960s when Joseph was 11 or 12 years old.

Joseph is an American Indian who lived with his family in Sioux Falls from 1966 to 1968, according to the lawsuit. The abuse happened at White's apartment in Flandreau, it states.

White was based at the Northern Indian Mission in Rapid City and was assigned to Flandreau, in eastern South Dakota, where the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe is located.

Joseph had no memory of the abuse until an October 2004 visit to Canada to see his sister, a devout member of the Mormon church, according to the complaint.

In a deposition transcript filed in court, White denies he sexually abused Joseph or any other boy, and testified that he was celibate when he served in Flandreau from Nov. 8, 1967 until July 13, 1968.

"No, nothing bad went on," he told a lawyer.

White's companion missionary at the time, Jay Larson, also testified that the two men followed the church's rule to stay in sight of each other at all times, and that he had no memory of White ever acting inappropriately, according to court documents.

The civil case is scheduled to go to trial Feb. 25 in Sioux Falls.

James McMahon, the Sioux Falls lawyer representing the church, has filed a motion for summary judgment, in effect asking a federal judge to rule on the case before the trial because of a lack of evidence.

The statute of limitations has expired and the law does not hold a church financially responsible for the actions of its volunteer missionaries who have to support themselves, the motion states.

"Courts throughout the country have refused to recognize the existence of a fiduciary relationship between a religious organization and its members based solely on religions teachings or faith," it states.

McMahon and one of Joseph's lawyers declined to comment.

Main Street Coffee Shop grand opening Dec. 22

MARTIN - On Saturday, Dec. 22, father and daughter team Butch and Barb Ceplecha, owners of the Main Street Coffee Shop will hold their grand opening celebration to officially welcome the community to their new establishment.

"We wanted a down home family atmosphere where folks can drink coffee, eat lunch, and visit" said Barb.

The Main Street Coffee shop, which is connected to two other Ceplecha enterprises, Butch's Heating and Cooling and sister Antonia's AK 'Scent'sations, opened to the public on Nov. 27 with soup-of-the-day offerings and deli sandwiches.

Soon, grilled hamburgers with french fries and other fried delights will join the menu.

The Main Street Coffee Shop now joins a heating and cooling and candle business and is open from 7 am to 7 pm.

The soft serve ice cream and banana splits come dressed in old fashioned soda fountain glasses.

It was Butch who came up with the Children's Corner where little ones can sit in tyke-sized chairs and color or work puzzles while parents enjoy their coffee, cocoa, or cappuccino alongside a sweet roll.

Barb is very proud of the interior construction work done by husband Josh Little Eagle and Uncle Daniel Ceplecha and agrees that it really was a family affair with Antonia, husband Robbie and son Eric Keiffer, daughter Samantha, niece Alexandra, nephew and mom Vicki helping out behind the counter.

She showed off a red and white cardboard Christmas light box which she conceals under the front counter.

It was her first 'cash register' until the new metal one arrived and she plans on keeping it to remind her of the birth of a dream come true.

The Main Street Coffee Shop is open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Indian studies online courses popular

MADISON, S.D. (AP) _ Online courses offered by the public university system in South Dakota are becoming increasingly popular.

The Board of Regents was told Thursday that nearly 14,500 students took online classes last year, an increase of 43 percent from 2004.

Regents Executive Director Tad Perry said it is not only South Dakotans who are taking those courses. He said many nonresidents also are taking online classes.

The public universities offer 641 courses on the Internet.

The most popular course last year was English composition, followed by South Dakota Indian studies and college algebra.

Advanced Rosebud electronics research facility operating on $4 million grant

MISSION - The Advanced Electronics Rosebud Integration research facility has become a reality on the Rosebud after several years of collaboration between the Rosebud Sioux tribe, the U. S. Army Space and Missile Defense Technical Center and Radiance Technologies of Huntsville, AL.

A $4 million appropriation from the Defense Department will enable the project to do research on testing no-lead soldering materials as used in electronic circuit board.

The European Union adopted the so-called Reduction of Hazardous Substance (RoHS) legislation effective July 1, 2006 that outlawed use of 6 different hazardous substances common in electronics manufacturing. These include lead, cadmium, mercury, hexavalent chromium, polybrominated biphenyls, and polybrominated diphenyl ethers. Any products built in or imported into Europe can no longer contain these substances. Traditional solders contain up to about 40% lead.

Asia and North America are following the EU's lead by eliminating the substances as well but lead free replacement solders have caused some concern about reliability and present significant challenges to manufacturers especially in high reliability, harsh environment military or space applications. Hence the need to research ways to improve existing soldering technologies to cope with the lead free solders.

The partnership between the three entities began back in 2004 when Barth Robinson, the current onsite Deputy Program Manager approached the Rosebud Sioux tribe and sought a partnership with the SDMTC. Radiance Technologies has manufactured remote sensors for soldiers in combat as well as an environmentally sound clam harvester.

The AERI research facility will also conduct research in improving other circuit technologies as utilized by the Defense Department. Pollution and harmful emissions will not be an issue at the facility as it is committed to a "green" philosophy.

In March a groundbreaking ceremony was held east of town and located near the Antelope dam where construction continues today. Governor Mike Rounds and representatives from the South Dakota congressional delegation were also in attendance.

Oglala Lakota College has apparently created a two year applied science degree and Sinte Gleska University is working on a curriculum that will allow a student to transfer to the South Dakota School of Mines and Technology. These applied science degrees will allow promising students to engage in long range planning for using technology and perhaps one day, help to make their respective tribes economically self-sufficient and leaders in technology.

SGU will play a vital role in providing a setting in which students and faculty can conduct experiments and develop production models for future use. The institution may also be able to pursue other such research opportunities and create a microcosm of high tech services in the area while becoming a full research partner in such things as alternative fuels, etc.

Honor the children with older Lakota words

At a time when suicide prevention activities are dominating the news in and around Rosebud, a couple of Lakota words come to mind that I learned from Francis Whitebird: they speak to the importance of children.

Francis is on the advisory committee for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Lakota language preservation project and when he comes up with a word that is unfamiliar to me, I quickly write it down. I appreciate the fact that Francis takes the time to reflect on Lakota words, or Lakol wicoiye and what their relevance to Lakota life might be.

When one studies Lakota there is always the temptation to translate it into English, while others believe that there is value in simply saying a word and allowing the listener to arrive at their own meaning. Whatever your preference the task is to learn a word and be able to apply it to other settings and maybe even appreciate the level of its sophistication. The Lakota phrase hoksi can kiye asks one to "honor their children" and in today's turbulent times, it is something that can boost the morale of all of our children. I say a child's self-esteem gets a wonderful boost when they are honored no matter the achievement. I recall getting a candy bar in high school for making the B honor roll and that thrilled me as I did not have a nickel to my name.

Yet, another Lakota word ihakicikta stresses the importance of interrelationships as it asks us to "take care of each other." I spoke of this term earlier, it is one which George Whirlwind Soldier shared during an earlier interview. I have since learned that both hoksi can kiye and ihakicikta are fairly common terms in Lakota and many of my colleagues who grew up with the language seem to know them.

The other term unikiciza unyi suta says that "we will be judged by the actions of our children" and it is another that Francis was willing to explain. It obviously is a concept that forces us to reflect upon the behavior and actions of our children and grandchildren as they make sense of the contemporary world in which we live.

One of my colleagues was lamenting the fact that Lakota society is slowing changing and adapting to the many influences which are not always positive. Older traditional Lakota society was fortunate in that it appeared to recognize the importance of caring for children and honoring them each day. There is much to learn from some of the older more classical Lakota terms as the answer to today's predicaments may lie in their interpretation.

We all need a hero

By Richard P. Holm, M.D.

We all need a hero. Whether that person is a religious figure, a parent, a favorite teacher, or a movie star, it's human nature to need someone to serve as a mentor, a champion, or a model for living.

Charles Eastman, M.D., also named Ohiyesa, (pronounced Oh-ee-suh) which means "winner," was born in 1862 in an American Indian village near Redwood Falls, Minn. Though his mother died during childbirth, he had a normal youth in the Indian culture.

Ohiyesa began a formal education when his father enrolled him into the missionary school in Flandreau, S.D. He was a bright young man, and after schooling there, moved on to Nebraska, Wisconsin, college at Dartmouth, N.H., and then attended medical school in Boston, graduating in 1890.

Dr. Eastman first practiced medicine in South Dakota, first at Pine Ridge Indian Reservation and later at the Crow Creek Reservation. He was one of the first Native American physicians to practice science-based medicine on Indian reservations, and he even was eyewitness to the events leading up to and following the Wounded Knee Massacre of Dec. 29, 1890.

Eastman went on to champion Native American rights, became a Washington lobbyist for the Dakota Sioux, and both Teddy Roosevelt and Calvin Coolidge assigned him to several tribal responsibilities.

He wrote about his Indian boyhood and his medical and political experiences. His work provides a marvelous two-world perspective. But most endearing perhaps was how Charles Eastman helped establish more than 30 Indian YMCA groups. Later he would help Ernest Seton of the Woodcraft Indians and Daniel Beard of the Sons of Daniel Boone to found the Boy Scouts of America.

This Native American physician, organizer, writer, and child-advocate was a native son, a real life hero, and an example for us all.

Take-home message:

1. We all need heroes to serve as examples for living.

2. One hero is Native American Charles Eastman, born in 1862. He went on to become a medical doctor, a political organizer, a writer, and helped start the Boy Scouts of America.

Letters to the Editor

The language is fading, we need to do something

Dear, Editor:

My name is Mario Black Spotted Horse and I go to school at St. Francis Indian School in St. Francis. I think our language is important to us because our grandmas and grandpas spoke it before us and it was a way of communicating with each other and with other tribes that spoke Lakota. It is also important to learn it and speak it for a full blood Lakota because it is another way of communicating with the Great Spirits.

I am a singer and have a drum group I sing with my cousins. We have been singing since we were little kids, but now we understand what's happening to our Lakota language. It's slowly fading away because all the old speakers are slowly leaving us to the Spirit World. When they're all gone our language might be gone too. I'm just now coming up to a point in my life when maybe I'm going to have to start learning the language and teaching it to the little ones myself. I am a Sundancer and have been a Sundancer for four years now. I go to sweats, pow-wows, sundances, and ceremonies where we communicate with the Great Spirits and ask for help for our Lakota people.

I think if our language is fading, we should do something about it. We should have something for the people who want to learn and are trying to save our language. We could have something like a drum class, language class, or we could just start speaking Lakota to each other and maybe people will pick it up and start speaking Lakota again. It would be better if we could speak to the old ones, understand what they are saying, and talk back to them in Lakota.

Mario Black Spotted Horse

My family speaks Lakota

Dear Editor.

Hello, I am a young Lakota student from St. Francis Indian School. I am responding to your series of articles about Lakota Language. I think Lakota is very important and should be taught to the younger generation. It is our way of life and our identity. I've seen some of the younger people speak it. But, sadly others do not know how to speak it. Now is the time to give them that opportunity.

The Lakota Language is our way of life and we should cherish it. My family speaks Lakota every time they talk. I understand what they are saying and I sometimes answer back. The younger ones do not know what their elders are saying so, they ask them to repeat it in English. Our language is the way we look at the world, and how we use it. In ceremonies they pray in Lakota to the Great Spirit. It's how we communicate and live. It's how our ancestors lived, and we should carry on the sacred tradition.

Lakota language is our identity, without it we would be lost. Today, young people are interested in the white man's ways. For example, the way they dress, their music, and their culture. They think of their own native language not important, but it is very important. "Our language is who we are as Lakota people", said a respected elder on the Rosebud Reservation.

In conclusion, our native language is important to all native people. For a long time now, the elders have been embarrassed by the young one's who don't want to learn. We should teach the kids how to speak Lakota. Every summer they should have a camp that teaches us Lakota. The kids should respect the language, and pass it down to their siblings. Then maybe one day we would make our elders proud.

Lee Bad Hand II

It's up to the young people to bring the language back

Dear Editor:

Hi, My Name is Tyson Kills In Water. I am a 10th grader at St. Francis Indian School. I am currently 15 soon to be 16. I want to learn about our Lakota Language. It's very sad that our Lakota Language is slowly dying out. But we can fix this problem. I am writing this letter so I can get other young students to learn our Lakota language.

Our Lakota Language is important because our language is slowly dying out. Many young adults are not interested in learning the language, to them I ask: What if we all didn't have our language, then what would you think? What if the only thing we knew was English, nothing else, how would you and your family feel? These are questions I ask myself everyday. But there would be no what-ifs if we could just get together and change things. Just take a look at The Blackfoot Tribe; they made their language come back. We can do that too, if we just get together.

What if our language was whipped out totally and all we did was just sit around and not even care or try to save it? How would you feel then? Then what if we saw another tribe with all their traditions, and we had nothing. How would you feel? I feel that we should all be speaking our languages to each other.

If anything I bet some of your parents understand but don't speak Lakota. Why don't we ask them why? It should have been our parents to teach us. We can't blame our parents or grandparents; it was the boarding schools that took away our language. Our grandparents were taught not to teach our parents the language or to even speak it at all. Now we young ones want to be taught and our parents can't because they never learned. I wonder now if all that history is behind us. But now it's up to us young peo-

Old school hoops

David Rooks

With this year's Lakota Nation Invitational tournament just around the corner I thought I'd exercise every tribal member's fundamental right. That is: talk about basketball. Granted, it's been a 100 pounds and three decades since I played any serious hoops but, like everybody I grew up with, I'm an expert. Just ask me.

As an old playroom king (if he went to Holy Rosary, ask your grandpa what that means) at boarding school, I remember what it was like on a cold snowy day outside to have three games of basketball going on the same court at the same time. In those days you could use the concrete pillars for a screen.

Funny, it seemed normal then.

This past weekend I watched my 8th grade son, Sam, play in a tournament in Rapid City. Naturally, as a Dad, I'm bound to be both proud and critical at the same time. Is it just me, or are kids nowadays less fundamentally sound than they used to be?

I mean, even among the better players the dribbling and passing skills seemed marginal. I saw way too much one on one play and defense was, more or less, non-existent.

Okay, so it was just one grade school tournament and the season is just starting. Maybe I should cut the kids a break. Although back in the dark ages, when I was a kid, grown ups said pretty much the same thing: "Kids nowadays don't play the game the way we used to." I would say: "Yeah, our basketballs don't have leather laces on them." But, now that I think about it, a pair of "Chuck Taylor Cons" was the best shoe you could get when I played. Nobody wore leather, everything was canvas.

Definitely old school.

Just in case I'm right, and kids at the younger ages aren't as skilled as they used to be, you could point your finger at a lot of things. One is all the distractions kids have these days. What with I pods, flat screens, cell phones, video games - you name it, there's a lot going on besides bouncing a ball from sun up to sundown. Also, who knows, maybe it's a lot harder to get a game.

I can't tell you how many times I've driven past an empty basketball court on a nice day.

I know, this is just another "back in the day" story and it's boring - but it's true. When I was a kid, the waiting line to get in a game on a Saturday morning could be an hour. You had to get there early, already have a team picked out, and you better keep on winning. You lose and you're through. Too many players, not enough courts. That certainly doesn't seem to be a problem anymore. You could put potted plants in the hoops.

All that said, I have to admit that when you get to the Lakota Nation Invitational and watch those teams play you're seeing some excellent hoops.

It's fast and it's exciting and - come to think of it - it's almost as good as back in the day.

Really, I'm an expert.

Notes From Indian Country

By Tim Giago

The Lakota will never forget Wounded Knee 1890

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I wonder if Tom Brokaw knew what was happening on the nine Indian reservations in his home state of South Dakota in 1968. I seriously doubt it.

On December 29, 1968, as they have done for many years, the Lakota people were gathered around the mass grave at Wounded Knee to pray. And on December 29, 1990, they would gather to mourn the 100th anniversary of the massacre of their people.To the non-Indians of South Dakota and the rest of America, December 29, 1990 was another day. But to the Lakota people, December 29 was a day they commemorated every year since 1890. It was a day when nearly 300 of their relatives were shot to death in cold blood by the enlisted men and officers of the 7th Cavalry. Ironically, 21 members of the 7th Cavalry were awarded Medals of Honor for this horrific slaughter of women and children.

White people ask why we Lakota still talk about Wounded Knee as if it was not ancient history. If something terrible happened to your grandmother - that's right, your grandmother - something so heinous that it became a part of American history, would you still consider that to be ancient history? I think not. A grandmother can never be ancient history or you wouldn't be able to ride over the river and through the woods to her house on holidays.

Consider this. On December 29, 1890, my grandmother, Sophie, was a 17-year-old student at the Holy Rosary Indian Mission, a Jesuit boarding school just a few miles from Wounded Knee. She was called out with the rest of the students to feed and water the horses of the soldiers of the 7th Cavalry that had just rode on to the mission grounds chasing down survivors that had escaped the slaughter. My grandmother recalled seeing blood on their uniforms and she overheard them bragging about the mighty victory they had just scored at Wounded Knee.

That's right, my grandmother, who is now deceased, remembered. Now does that make the Massacre at Wounded Knee ancient history to me? You bet that it does not. Many other Lakota still living today had grandmothers and grandfathers that were either killed or survived the massacre. No, it is not ancient history to the Lakota.

In early December of 1990, as the 100th anniversary of the massacre at Wounded Knee approached, I wrote the cover story for USA Today. I quoted an editorial that appeared in the Aberdeen (SD) Saturday Review on January 3, 1891, just five days after the massacre. The author wrote about those terrible "Redskins," his favorite word for Indians. He wrote, "The Pioneer has before declared that our only safety depends upon the total extermination of the Indians. Having wronged them for centuries we had better, in order to protect our civilization, follow it up by one or more wrong and wipe these untamed and untamable creatures from the face of the earth."

That editorial calling for the genocide of the Lakota people was written by L. Frank Baum, the man who would later write, "The Wonderful Wizard of Oz." There have been many others before and since that called for genocide against a race of people. Adolph Hitler and Pol Pot come to mind. But then they never followed up their calls for genocide by writing a charming book for children. It appears to be unthinkable to most Americans that such a wonderful man as L. Frank Baum could be compared to other inhuman beasts that called for the extinction of a race of people.

In 2006, descendants of Baum asked the Lakota people to forgive Baum for the editorials he wrote calling for their annihilation. What do you think the Jewish people would say today if the descendants of Adolph Hitler approached them asking them to forgive Adolph for nearly exterminating all Jews? It's a tough question because the attempted extermination of the Jews was taken much more seriously than the extermination of the Lakota people. After all, according to the white man, we were just Indians and sub-humans at that and we didn't have the power of the press or of the free world to support our claims to life. In order for America to expand, the people of the Great Sioux Nation had to be expendable.

December 29, 2007 will mark the 117th anniversary of the slaughter of innocents at Wounded Knee. As is their custom, the Lakota people will gather at the mass grave where the bodies of men, women and children were dumped and they will pray and ask the United States government to apologize for this day of death. They will pray that the Medals of Honor handed out to the murderers be rescinded and they will pray for peace between the Lakota and the rest of America. There will be a ceremony called "Wiping Away the Tears," and this ceremony will conclude a day of mourning, a day when the Lakota reach out to the rest of America for peace and justice.

Americans may have forgotten Wounded Knee and pushed it to the back pages of history, a bad memory to some, but the Lakota people have not nor will they ever forget this terrible day until they at last see justice.

Letters to the Editor

A mother's agony

Dear Editor:

This letter is about Corey L. Apple and how he died two months ago.

He was my son, he was a father, he was a brother, and he was a human being, a real person. He had a sense of humor; he loved his kids and did his best to care for them. He was 33 years old and lived a simple life, Corey wasn't perfect but then again who is. He liked to party and socialize with everyone sometimes with the wrong people. I know this.

I am the parent who was visited by two police officers at 4 a.m. in the morning on Oct. 16, 2007. They came to tell me that my son passed away. They told me he had been assaulted and left lying on the road. A police unit was transporting a prisoner from Wanblee and ran over my son and killed him.

It has been two long months filled with tears and memories, sleepless nights, anguish and waiting. I have been waiting for answers. Who was my son with? Who assaulted him? What happened that last day? Why isn't anyone charged with anything? Why is the police officer still working? What is the standard operating procedure? What is the protocol?

I had my last visit with the criminal investigation department on Dec. 13, 2007 at Pine Ridge, Mitch Pourier and Marty Hansford. They informed me that my son's "case" was closed. They said my son was very intoxicated and there are no witnesses, none, that seen him being assaulted, they don't know why or what he was doing out on that road that night and anybody could have run over him. I asked Marty Hansford "how many people do you have working here?" he said "four CI's and me" I asked him what his duties were and he answered "administrative work." I asked "how could you possibly do an adequate investigation?" He replied "a lot of times we don't, we try to prioritize, violent crimes come first, our job is to collect information and give it to the U.S. attorney.

Last year we had 230 juvenile cases, and 148 adult cases." The emotions I felt sitting there listening to him were overwhelming because I felt that they were basically telling me "sorry but your son was out on that road because he was drunk". I know all too well what alcohol can do to a family and I'm not condoning Corey's actions but it still hurts and it still affected our family.

My life has changed. I became more aware of the criminal justice system and the limited personnel, minimal funding and lack of services. Our needs are many, what can we do? I feel it is the responsibility of the people, we as a nation could ensure these departments have enough trained personnel and a strong leadership to properly investigate these cases. It is my opinion that much attention is being given to minor crimes and the major crimes fall through the cracks of the system. There is no justice, there is no protection. Our system needs to be honest with compassion for the people. My heart goes out to those officers who work endlessly and have to witness such horrific scenes, and listen to all the stories of abuse and neglect, assault and murder, elderly abuse, rape and the violence continues, I want to acknowledge the work that you do and thank you. I live a simple life working, taking care of my family, doing the best I can. Now the world seems like a foggy lens, feeling like something is missing, someone that I will never talk to, never look at, never touch again, not in this world.

I suppose I will never know what happened to my son, there is one thing that I do know and that it is not okay for families to pick pieces of their loved ones off of the highway.

While our sorrow is profound we continue to pray for all of the people who have lost loved ones.

Respectfully,
Marie Apple

ple to bring our language back. All we have to do is ask higher power to help us. If we can get enough help, we can do it all together and get back our Lakota Language.

In conclusion, I think that if we work to back our language, we would be talking in our own language again instead of English.

Our language should be important to us. But I think not all people see that.

So let's get together and at least try to bring back our languages.

One significant day in November

By Ivan F. Starr
Oglala Lakota

Certain days or dates have significant meaning for people, like birthdays and anniversaries. For me, Nov. 28 is a momentous day; I reported for duty in Vietnam in 1968. It symbolizes the final day of my youthful innocence. It is the beginning of 365 life-altering days. This experience was so devastating that it continues to eclipse my life.

No matter where I went or what I did (even now), memories from that experience always find a way to intrude. In fact, this phenomenon was and is a daily occurrence. Although I completed treatment for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, I find myself struggling with the symptoms. I've learned to accept that fact that recovery is actually a life-long effort.

One of the things I have done to help myself is to learn about the war's history, the country, the politics, and anything else connected to it. Another thing I am learning to do is to become an active participant of society, as opposed to isolating myself from it.

Thus, when asked to participate in a cultural event at Piya Wiconi (Kyle) on this particular date, I was more than happy to accept. Before I discuss this event, though, I absolutely have to explain something to your readership regarding this devastating disorder.

PTSD does not only affect war veterans; it usually has an effect on anyone subjected to trauma; police officers, ambulance crews, victims of tornados/floods/rape/incest/accidents. Although, help is readily available these days, most do not seek help and trudge through life on the outskirts of society.

When the Piya Wiconi event was over, I went to investigate a statue that had caught my eye earlier. I was surprised to find a veteran's monument listing the names of all Oglala men who served in the military since World War I. I am not pointing a finger at anyone nor am I attempting to change anything. I found a couple of discrepancies and I have to discuss them.

First, my cousin, the late Glen Bores A Hole, is not listed. There are newspaper accounts (Stars and Stripes & Bennett County Booster II) of his combat actions during the Korean War as an infantryman with the 2nd Infantry Division. His 4-year reenlistment concluded with a "less than honorable" discharge. I learned that PTSD had gotten the best of him.

Not aware of his severe and debilitating after-combat reactions, he quietly endured, lived alone, and died at an early age. Today his grave is not marked with a military headstone nor does he have a flag. I feel history, greater society, and his own people have forgotten him despite his contributions to the national war effort in Korea.

Another veteran is erroneously listed on the monument as an "era" veteran of the Vietnam War. This refers to those who served in the military during the war but not in Vietnam. Although this man did not show any outward signs of PTSD, he is still a veteran and his story must be told.

For starters, the late Edwin Fills The Pipe should be listed under "in-country." As a Marine radio operator, he took part in the famous 1965 China Beach landing at Danang. What this means is that he was with the first combat troops to set foot on Vietnamese soil. The war began then and lasted through ten long years, officially ending in 1975.

I am not sure what can be done about these discrepancies, I simply feel my effort here is warranted in view of the sacrifices made by these men and all those Lakota warriors who served in other wars, including those serving now.

There is more. I recall a formal 1981 ceremony on the housing parking lot where the building was named "Fills The Pipe Building" to honor his accomplishments as a former housing program director. Mainly, he successfully negotiated with the federal Housing and Urban Development authorities to release more houses.

Previously, HUD halted house allocations to the homeland because of a humongous back-rent amount. This embarrassing situation resulted when irresponsible politicians allowed renters to "forget" their rent payments in exchange for a vote. Fills The Pipe convinced renters to initiate payment schedules (an intricate task) and took that to HUD.

The history of our housing agency leaves much to be desired. I don't expect anyone to put his name up on the building but it would be the honorable thing to do. I understand money is in short supply these days. I wonder often about the changes he would have made if he had not died so suddenly during his campaign for the tribal presidency. He was a popular candidate.

Another notable accomplishment was to acquire a P.L. 93-638 contract for Loneman School Corporation in 1976; as a result, Loneman was the first homeland school to do so. His painted portrait hangs in the school library to honor what he did for his community.

Now, back to the event; the 5th Annual Lakol Woglaka Akiciyapi (Lakota Speech Contest) at Piya Wiconi Nov. 28. I was one of four "judges" from across the reservation and our job was to determine proficiency levels of elementary, high school, and college level orators.

First, I believe firmly in understanding and acknowledging the origin of anything we encounter in our lives. If we want to succeed in dealing with our current language loss dilemma, this is a necessity. To determine the direction we want to go, we must first know where we've been. Of course, as we all know, awareness of our past does not mean lingering there.

Karen Lone Hill, Lakota Studies Department, Oglala Lakota College is heading up this event.

The most noticeable attribute of the event is that more and more schools are participating. At the same time, I realized that my own awareness of what people are doing today to bring the Lakota language back to an active status is severely deficient.

Marcell Bull Bear, the master of ceremonies for the event was positive and stimulating. He envisioned this contest in every school on the reservation. He spoke of Lakota language proficient disk jockeys in the future of KILI FM radio and encouraged speakers to use the language at all times.

To finish, I was very fortunate to engage briefly in an after-lunch discussion with Brian Charging Cloud and Robert Two Crow; the topic was the value of developing new Lakota words. Immersion would be very difficult because we do not have Lakota words for much of society's latest products and concepts.

Historically, it seems language adaptation started and then stopped. As proof, we have new words like sunkawakan (horse), canpagmiyanpi (wagon), mazawakan (gun), and iyecinkiyanke (car). These words indicate the flexibility of our language, an element crucial to its survival. Did American society develop too fast for us? Did we just give up?

I felt a bit misplaced when the speech contest ended. I became conscious of my own ignorance regarding current language revitalization efforts. The only action I can take now is to become active again in language maintenance efforts on the homeland.

A Sicangu Perspective

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

We cannot depend on schools to save the language

In my travels I found that tribes across this country are exerting their sovereignty to preserve their languages through different strategies. A Pueblo tribal government in New Mexico exerted their tribal sovereignty by taking their children from the classroom for one hour each day and teaching them their language. Their true commitment is reflected in their financial support. They are paying their language teachers with tribal funds the wage of a professional . They acknowledge that these teachers have skills that have not been learned or could not be learned in higher institutions. Their tribal communities are determined to preserve their language by having special community events that ensure their language is used during these events. These are actions that we must take into account. We must consider ways in which to teach our people to value and respect our language. We can start by teaching our children from the time they began to speak and reward those children who are speaking our language. We must find ways to preserve our language not in the future but today.

We as Sicangu have not made a serious commitment to save our language and preserve our identity. We have turned our language and history over to the schools, the very institutions who are partially responsible for the loss of our language and who have not yet produced one fluent speaker since the inception of Indian Studies. Schools on the reservation pay language teachers minimum wage because they refuse to acknowledge language teachers have special skills that are held by a few. Instead Lakota language is treated like a stepchild, like something they have to put up with. They do the minimum so they can defend that they are attempting to do something. But, in reality we cannot place the blame fully on the schools because we as families have not made a serious effort in our homes.

As I was growing up most youths my age knew how to speak Lakota or at least understood what the elders were talking about. We didn't realize or understand how important it was to preserve and maintain our language at that time. We took our Lakota language for granted never thinking that one day it would be threatened with extinction. Maybe because of the stigma and punishment that was associated with our language many denied they spoke or understood Lakota. It was pounded into our heads that it was not good to be Lakota. Yet, we cannot blame those who were punished for not teaching their children our language, as caring and loving parents they were trying to protect their children. However, today, some have been truly brainwashed, they talk about our ceremonies as devil worship or spout other ridiculous comments. Or worse yet, they ridicule others who are trying to speak Lakota which is a way of discouraging them from trying. We must be aware this is all part of the assimilation process. For maybe a century we were in a survival mode. Many of us still carry unresolved grief and anger because of those experiences. Obviously, despite all that our parents did to protect us there were some things that happened in boarding school they never knew about, things that would be hard for them to believe. That is part of our history that we must overcome. For the sake of our children we need to acknowledge and examine where things went wrong and live our lives with determination so our children will have better lives and be proud of their identity.

Mitakuyepi, It is time to restore the spiritual quality of life that is integral to being Lakota. It is time to examine our lives and make a commitment that we must enrich the lives of our children with family commitment and traditions, with our language and history and culture. Lakota language is crucial to the survival of our culture and our identity. This is absolutely true, there are many concepts in our language that cannot be translated into English. Language is woven into all Lakota spiritual concepts, it is a link to our ideals, such as family connections, compassion for others, sharing and taking care of each other. It is a tie that is tightly knotted to our prayers and songs sung in ceremonies.

Some languages are said to be romance languages, others languages sound cold and harsh but the Lakota language is a language of the spirit. It is a language that reflects what is most important in life. Many of our values spoken in English seem to be only surface concepts that do not t touch our hearts and spirits. This is so because our philosophy for life in ingrained in our language something that English cannot define.

As a little child, I remember my great grandmother, Elizabeth Whirlwind Soldier, brushing my hair from my face and wiping the tears from my eyes when I fell and skinned my knee saying "Sika, Sika." I knew I was loved just by that one simple little word. I knew someone cared how I felt, cared that I was hurt and that one little word was spoken with support and love. We lost that when we went to boarding school, where no one cared about our injuries and least of all our feelings. In boarding school we grew up in a world of numbness and many may still feel that way today. They lost that sense of togetherness, of family and compassion. Maybe that is why we are losing so many of our young to self-destruction.

This holiday season I think of the families who have lost loved ones. My heart goes out to them. There is so much about being Lakota that our youth do not know about. In my solitude I search for solutions and I catch a glimpse of those young people who have not seen life as worth living. I press them strongly into my prayers and thoughts and think; "What can we do! How can we help our youth." How did our past leaders get us through those times of great difficulties and tribulations? I know that their goal was the survival of our people - to keep us strong and together. The heartbreak they must have experienced. We are fortunate, Mitakuyepi. We have so much to be proud of, we had great leaders who had foresight, we had great families who valued family life and who inspired their young to look to the future. Yes, we are fortunate, we have a great history. I treasure being Lakota. I choose to remember the good of our people.

The holiday season always remind me of the happy times with my Whirlwind Soldier Great Grandparents and Grandparents. I can't help but remember the love and compassion that my family demonstrated when we, my brothers and I came home from boarding school. We didn't even realize that we were poor. Our little bags of Christmas candy and nuts were a special treat. Even today tears come to my eyes, my feelings are overwhelming when I hear Christmas hymns sung in Lakota. I lament that many of our youth have not experienced that very strong concept of family. The breakdown of family didn't happen over night but began with the separation of children from their families. With much effort and determination we can restore what we have lost.

Le lila wopila tanka heca. I am grateful to be Lakota, Mitakuyepi. remember we are Lakota and our language is the bond that holds us together. I hope that in this coming new year we seriously consider ways to save our Lakota language - we cannot depend fully on the schools to do this. Our Lakota language is the strongest connection to who we are. Our blood, our genes make us Lakota. Mitakuyepi, unsikicila unpi.

Rowland awarded tribal director of the year

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux Tribe presented Jackie "Siers" Rowland, director of the Higher Education Program, with the Director of the Year Award.

The top five nominees were announced at the first awards ceremony held on Dec. 5 in the Lakota Dome at the Prairie Wind Casino.

This event starts the beginning of a new era for the Oglala Sioux Tribe in recognizing directors for their hard work and dedicated services to the tribe and to the members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

Rowland has been an employee for the tribe a total of 23 years in various positions within the tribe, but took an interest in the education of our youth.

She has been the director for the Higher Education Program for nine years. "With a commitment to her goals in providing a service to the Native American students, Jackie has proven to be a valuable asset to the people of the Oglala Sioux Tribe," said Alice Perkins.

Jackie Rowland

Perkins said she is grateful for the tribe to give out awards such as this and hopes it continues in the future.

Other awards were presented at the awards ceremony also on Dec. 5.

A list of the awards was not submitted by press time.

Cultural awareness and suicide prevention workshops Jan. 30 and 31

MISSION - The Suicide Awareness Partnership Project through the South Dakota Division of Mental Health and the HELP!Line Center is proud to sponsor a cultural awareness in mental health treatment and suicide prevention training.

The training is a two day learning experience in Lakota culture and perspectives relating to mental health issues and suicide. This 15 hour training will be delivered by staff from Wakanyeja Pawicayapi Inc. (Children First) program. The workshop is free.

Learn about Lakota beliefs and practices relating to perspectives in mental health treatment and suicide.

Examine how Lakota life ways are critical to ensuring healthy development of children, youth and families and how Lakota cultural interventions are used in suicide prevention.

Explore this through an understanding of Lakota human development stages, necessary Lakota interventions in development and historical issues that have affected Lakota generations.

The Training Dates are Jan. 30-31, 2008 from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day at the human services building at the commons rooms at Sinte Gleska University, Mission.

Seating is limited to 30 and pre- registration is required. Register now with Nancy Fleming at 605-484-0738 or nancy@helplinecenter.org.

Red Cloud Indian School honors Chief Red Cloud

By Tina Merdanian
Red Cloud Indian School

PINE RIDGE - As part of Chief Red Cloud Honoring Day, Monday, Dec. 10, school wide, students at Red Cloud Indian School took time to remember and honor the Historic Chief Red Cloud with prayers. During the day, the curriculum included lessons on the life and history of Chief Red Cloud.

The students learned that during the mid 1800s, a series of battles broke out between the Lakota eager to protect their homeland and the United States government, intent on domination over all land within its exterior borders. Several treaties, including the famous Fort Laramie Treaty of 1851, were made and quickly broken during this slowly rising conflict.

Chief Red Cloud became a great leader of the Oglala, Lakota and led the most successful military campaign ever waged against the United States by an indigenous group.

The result of Chief Red Cloud's great military success was the signing of the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1868, which established the western half of South Dakota as Lakota land, and provided a short period of peace in the area.

In 1874, Custer's expedition into the Black Hills breached the treaty and war was renewed in the Black Hills area. Finally, in 1878 Chief Red Cloud's followers were given a "permanent place" on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Over time, Chief Red Cloud had many dealings with men he knew as the Sina Sapa, the "black robes." Sina Sapa referred to the black cassocks worn by men of the Society of Jesus, better known as the Jesuits. The Jesuits were and continue to be renowned for their emphasis on education. Chief Red Cloud saw education as the only true route to freedom for indigenous peoples. Chief Red Cloud sent a petition to Washington, D.C. to allow the Jesuits to come to the Reservation and set up a school "so that our children may be as wise as the white man's children." Red Cloud saw his way of life ending. For Lakota people to prosper, the children must be given the tools to walk in both worlds.

One of the first buildings on the Red Cloud Indian School campus, that was built in 1888 and housed the first students.

Federal policy "Grant Peace Policy" at that time designated the Pine Ridge Reservation as a Protestant reservation--that is, the only religious sect allowed to proselytize to the Oglala Lakota "Sioux."

This policy complicated the granting Red Cloud's request; but his desire was realized in 1888 shortly before he died.

Try to picture what those first days of school must have been like for the Lakota students, as well as their teachers.

Just think, the year was 1888, only 12 years after the Custer battle. Surely the parents of some those students took part in defending their way of life. Many of the great Leaders who valiantly fought to save the Lakota's free and independent way of life were still living-Red Cloud, Sitting Bull, American Horse and others.

These were truly "nature's children", they spent their days under open skies of the rolling pine covered hills, and for many of them the colors from mother earth was home.

Then suddenly they were in school, in this very building you see pictured here. How frustrating it must have been to be in a closed off classroom, hour after hour.

Their only "reading" had been interpreting Mother Natures signs and what she had to offer every human on earth, but now they were to learn from white paper with all those strange and puzzling marks. And, as if this wasn't enough, they could speak no or very little English and their teachers were strangers to the Lakota language.

But somehow they got along and while only 54 students enrolled at first, word spread that it was not long for a few weeks they were engulfed with 125 students, all boarders, in a building that was planned for one hundred.

Probably this should have been expected, for this school was, after all, Red Cloud's great dream for his Lakota children.

After the long, sad wars were over, and the Lakota traditional way of life has been suppressed, Red Cloud knew that his people were going to have to learn to travel a new road.

Money for this building was provided by Katherine Drexel, the daughter of a wealthy Philadelphia businessman.

In the beginning the school was intended to be primarily a vocational school. While the students were taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, great stress was placed on farming and the mechanical arts for the boys, and the girls were taught housekeeping, cooking, sewing, spinning, and weaving. As the years went by, however, many more subjects were added, and a full fledged high school was established.

In 1969, Holy Rosary Mission School officially changed its name to Red Cloud Indian School, both as a sign of respect for the man who had the vision to found the school, and to demonstrate that Red Cloud Indian School's mission is to help form the next generations of Lakota leaders; including the development of a lasting bond between two cultures working to enhance the best parts of both to better serve the people of the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Hope all is well for you and you are keeping warm today, I am writing because of some steps I have taken from the last time I wrote. I took a step, I stopped being afraid and moved out of my residence. I guess what I am asking is when I move in the close near future do you see me doing good? Will I find a place? And a good job?

The other question I have for you is do you see me having another child in the future with my current significant other or for that fact is there something wrong with him or me so we haven?t been able to have a child? God bless and have a wonderful holiday season.

Wanting a child

Dear Wanting a Child:

Yes, you will find a place - probably in Rapid City. I see a house with three bedrooms, one bathroom, a small kitchen and a living and dining room. It looks to me that it is slightly off the street and has a tall tree towards the back. The house sits on a small incline in the front yard. This is probably one year from now.

I do see a pregnancy...actually, what I see is you holding a baby, in a light blue soft flannel blanket, standing at the window in an older home. The walls are yellow and the window is surrounded by wood. It is snowing outside, and there is quite a pile of snow. I can see hedge at the edge of your yard covered by snow.

The baby is very new, probably under a couple of weeks old. So, when will that be? Probably not this winter - so most likely next winter. The baby will be born just before the snow storm hits.

I see you working in office job - or a support role to an executive. This must mean that you are going to go to school to better your job skills; thereby you will create a better reality for yourself. I feel like this begins this January.

Remember, you are in charge of creating your life in the way you live, think, pray, and work towards the dream. First, see in your mind and feel in your heart what you want to create, secondly, pray for the opportunity to recognize the gifts (things) the Creator brings you to help you create this dream, thirdly, pray to recognize the opportunities (people) that are brought to you, and fourthly, do what you need to do to get it done. In other words, See what needs to be done, do what needs to be done and it will be done. Always work towards your dream with gratefulness, or Wopila in your heart.

Always love everyone that offers you the opportunity to work. Always give Wopila, and always share your good fortunes with others. That will give you wiconi. You will love your life.

Dear Anna,

First of all, Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you! And second I believe in you, as you gave my mom truth and strength. I too would like to know what's in store for me.

Well, first of all, I have three sons from three different men and I couldn't keep none of the relationships. I'm also very unhappy, very poor, have no car and feel lost.

I was once happy, with my third son's father, whom I still love, but for some reason I got scared and threw it all away. Then I became very lost, still longing for this. I'm very hurt by everything I mean everything, please tell me what you see my future or please give me some advice or direction.

The lost coward

Dear Lost coward:

Oh my. Reading this letter made my solar-plexis (stomach area) tighten up. I feel your despair. I am not lecturing you, but please try to change your perspective, and it will change your experience. Here is how, look at the three man thing this way: Okay, so I haven't found the man that will love me just as I am and that I can love with all the love a human being deserves. I'm okay with that. Now, understand this: each child was designed by the Creator to have the parents he/she has. There are no accidents. Each child has a soul agreement as to who his/her parents will be. This is a sacred agreement. That will allow you to forgive yourself for your choices.

And next:...for your own benefit, God also gave you the chance to experience what you don't want and who you don't want as a quick and impact lesson. Keep choosing men that are similar to each other and you will have similar experiences. Learn that you don't want an angry, insecure man, and a healthy man will not want an angry, insecure woman either.

Please learn to come from a more positive place in your heart. Fear destroys everything it touches. It causes wars. Fear, in analogic terms, is the devil's wedge. If you come from a place of fear it will control you. For instance, if you are afraid your mate will be unfaithful, then you will treat them in that harsh way, second-guessing them and harassing them, until you harass them right out the door and into the arms of another. Come back to center. Read the Four Agreements, by Don Miguel Ruiz, available at Borders...once you get it, you can get on in your life and begin in a better place to live a better life. This book will give you a formula for successful personal relationships, better self-esteem and a better understanding of who you are.

Your life will be better. You will have a good home, good love and fulfilling work. I see that for you, so now see it for yourself and do what must be done. Consider this, your life is just about to be fun. I promise.

Dear Anna,

Recently I have diagnosed with a disease that will eventually take my life. I tried to tell my children but it is so easy to see they either don't care or they are in denial. I told my ex husband and he doesn't seem to grasp it also. He needs to know for their sake. I feel I am bonded closely to my daughters but not with my sons. Now I am wondering if maybe they really don't care or they in denial. When I talk to them about it, they change the subject or ignore me.

What do you suggest? I almost feel as though I should just let it go and go on with my life and do the things I feel I need to do to prepare them for it, like teaching my youngest to survive without me.

Needing Advice

Dear Needing Advice:

I see your sons as not being able to handle it at all - not conversationally nor in any way. They will go so far as to not allow others to speak of it either. That is just them, so please understand, they love you and that is why they can't deal with the reality of your death.

Your ex also doesn't know how to react, this is unchartered territory for him. You can bet though, when you finally make your Journey, he will cry.

Please, yes. Go on with your life and do the things you need to do to prepare your youngest.

Please live in the moment, because you are still here, physical, alive and loving. I think that you have longer here on the earth than the doctor's have said. Please, if you can find it in your heart, go to ceremony.

Enjoy your time here. It is all any of us really have.

You are well respected, loved and a gentle one. Your journey, when it comes, will be truly beautiful. My heart and prayers travel with you always.

Dear Anna:

What do you think about what is going on with the Pine Ridge council? I mean about the drug testing and the trouble and the suspensions and the going to court and the proposed recall of the council people. What do you think?

This time, they even amazed me.

Amazed

Dear Amazed:

I have one word for it: IRONY. Just from an observational stand point (and believe me I could write books on what I think), and to keep it simple I want to ask a few questions to The People about this council: What, besides bickering and tearing up people, not only within their own group, but in the programs...what positive thing have they done? Have they enacted any rulings or cleaned up any abuses to help the children, the elderly or the tribe in general?

Have they established anything that will stand good for The People throughout time? Have they improved the lives of The People in any way? Have they created any suggestions or plans for improving the economic infrastructure for he Tribe?

Thank Tunkisila, they are elected positions. I feel that this council needs therapy.

That, pretty much, is what I think. Oh, by the way, I do understand that some council members feel that their hands are tied, because the whole group is polarized. For you, then, pray and do the right thing. Please, get out of objecting to and about people. Read the Four Agreements by Don Miguel Ruiz, available at Borders. Read it, then see if you guys can get along. It can't hurt.

If you have any questions regarding scheduling times please contact Shannon DeNoyer, Dental Secretary at (605) 747-3277.

Little Wound, Brice Hornbeck set to defend title

Cavaliers are gone, White River has arrived, Red Cloud is number one seed

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

RAPID CITY - For the second time in the history of the Lakota Nation Invitational, the two teams who played in the LNI championship game returned three months later to play for the State A championship. Last year it was Little Wound knocking off the defending state champion, St. Thomas More 49-46 to win the LNI; in March the Mustangs and the Cavaliers played for the State A championship on the same Civic Center floor, STM downed Little Wound by 10 points to win their second straight State A championship. Their loss to Little Wound in December was their only loss in two years.

In 1989, Custer and Red Cloud played for the LNI championship, Custer won a hard fought battle. Both coaches agreed to meet on the same floor three months later for the state championship, neither coach, Larry Luitjens of Custer or Dusty LeBeau of Red Cloud, had any idea that the wish made in December would play itself out as a state championship game three months later on the same floor; Custer won the state championship in a hard fought game with Red Cloud.

White River is set to make its first appearance in the Lakota Nation tourney; when the first SD Sportswriters poll came out in mid-December, White River was rated number one in the B while Red Cloud was number one in the A. If by chance, White River and Red Cloud played for the LNI championship, it would be the first time two number one ranked teams met in the LNI championship game.

On another historical note, Louie Krogman, a senior point guard for White River is set to break the all time individual scoring record for all classes in South Dakota. Don Jacobson, Lake Norden, finished with 2,825 points in his high school career which ended in the mid-fifties. Krogman ended up his junior year with 2,653 points and is set to break the record during the Lakota Nation tourney. Krogman, who has already signed to play college ball at the University of South Dakota in Vermillion, has played three games this year and scored 33 in the first, he had 42 against Winner and 36 against Kadoka. Originally it was predicted Louie would break the record on Friday, during the championship semi-finals but after averaging 37 points in his first three games this year, he is on track to break the record during the championship quarterfinals on Thursday night.

"This goes both ways," said tournament director Bryan Brewer, "the wide focus and attention by people in and out of the state will bring additional attention to the Lakota Nation tourney but with Louie breaking the record during the LNI, we are providing an outstanding stage for this incredible accomplishment, none of us will see this record broken in our lifetimes."

Brice Hornbeck is leading his 2007/08 edition of the Little Wound Mustangs into this year's tourney with the idea of picking up back to back titles. Hornbeck has led his team to two strong opening season wins against St. Francis and Crow Creek; he scored 28 points in the first game and had 26 points, nine rebounds, nine steals and six assists in his second game. McCauley, Big Boy, Pierce, LeBeau, Apple and Shangreaux are gone to graduation and Ty Lunderman, a senior who played on both of Little Wound's state tournament teams won't be back until second semester. Rob Mendoza is the coach and he is busy instilling a stronger sense of team in this year's edition of the Mustangs. After winning last year's LNI, Little Wound went on to a number one ranking during the year and eventually took second in the state to St. Thomas More.

White River is not a one dimensional team any longer. Eldon Marshall has put together a strong supporting cast for his record

LNI Tournament, once again, is much more than basketball

RAPID CITY - "You know, last year and probably this year, the hand game tournament will be bigger than the basketball tourney," said Bryan Brewer, tournament director, "we probably had 38 hand game teams last year compared to 32 basketball teams."

No nothing is bigger than the basketball tournament but there is a lot more than just basketball going on over the four days of the Lakota Nation Invitational.

For the second year, the Teca Wacipi Okolakiciye will host a youth pow wow; it will be 11 a.m. on Wednesday and go to 5 p.m., sponsored by Wolf Creek School and Red Shirt Community School.

The art show opens Wednesday at 9 a.m. Education workshops for the student athletes go Wednesday and Thursday; the Lakota Language Bowl starts on Wednesday; the Knowledge Bowl is in the LaCroix Hall on Wednesday and for the first time there will be a story telling competition, sponsored by the journalism department of South Dakota State University of Brookings.

The Hand game tourney runs Thursday and Friday in the Rushmore Hall; LNI boxing goes Friday in the Rushmore Hall South while wrestling starts Saturday at 10 a.m .with the finals set for 5 p.m. in the arena.

Of course everything culminates with the championship girls and boys basketball games Saturday night at 7 and 8:30 p.m.

There will be a Wiping of Tears ceremony on Friday before the grand entry and a presentation of the 25th Silver Anniversary Girl's team on Friday.

Until the new civic center addition is completed in December of 2008, the tournament will continue to use additional facilities including St. Thomas More High School, Rapid City Central High School and South Dakota Tech college gym.

American Horse pounds Pine Ridge for Big Foot A championship

MARTIN - After a hard fought semi-final win over Little Wound on Wednesday, American Horse came out struggling a bit in the Big Foot A Girl's championship game in Martin on Thursday against undefeated Pine Ridge, Sharay Brewer had five points in the first quarter on the way to a team high 17 points to lead Pine Ridge to a 12-10 first quarter lead until Francis Around knocked down eight points in the second to help he Lady Chiefs to a 22-20 halftime lead on the way to a 54-43 A Championship win.

Sharay hit six of eight free throws in the second to keep the game close but Christina Long Wolf came off the bench for American Horse and grabbed three offensive rebounds and turned them into three straight baskets as the Lady Chiefs extended their lead to 34-32 at the end of three.

Around Him hit for eight of her game high 22 points to help finish off the Lady Thorpes; Tasina Helper, a seventh grader, broke her wrist on Wednesday but kept playing through the championship game finishing with 14 points, seven rebounds, six steals and two assists. Around Him added eight rebounds to her 22 points, five steals and three assists. Marissa Around Him pulled down 12 rebounds with four points and three assists.The Lady Chiefs finished the season 12-1 winning the A championship; Pine Ridge finished 14-1. Brewer totaled 17 points and 13 rebounds.

Little Wound defeated Wolf Creek 63-61 for third place while Red Cloud got by Loneman 41-36 for fifth.

All tourney awards went to Morgan Brewer and Arlene Brewer/Wolf Creek, Marissa Brooks and Arlana Brown Bull/Little Wound, Kyleigh Blacksmith and Juliana Her Many Horses/Loneman, Tiarra Little and Shaylene Zimiga/Red Cloud, Brook Pond and Sharay Brewer/Pine Ridge and Marissa Around Him and Tasina Helper/American Horse.

Wolf Creek's Morgan Brewer scored 37 points in the third place game and was named Ms. Offense, Arlana Brown Bull of Little Wound was Ms. Defense, Ms. Hustle went to Sharay Brewer, Team Sportsmanship went to Red Cloud and the MVP honors went to Francis Around Him.

breaking point guard. RJ Estes, a transfer from Lower Brule joins Frankie Waln, Matthew Bartlett, Kyle Rattling Leaf and Louie's younger brother Jake to make a formidable run at both the LNI title but a State B championship as well. White River has gone to State the past two years taking third last year.

Red Cloud brings a strong, experienced and hungry crew to this year's LNI tourney; the Crusaders finished with a 19-4 record last year, losing to St. Thomas More in the Region 8A championship game.

Red Cloud's four losses came from teams playing for a state championship, two to Little Wound, one to St. Thomas More and one to Chadron who played for the state B championship in Nebraska last year. Red Cloud returns eight of their top ten players with all five starters back. The Crusaders worked hard in the off-season, playing 21 games in the spring and 51 games over June and July in team camps around the region and beyond.

They won the Rapid City Stevens summer league beating RC Central in the championship 82-40.

They also beat White River in the SD Tech team camp finals after knocking off Platte 69-25. In head coach Matt Rama's fifth year at the school, the team brings a strong focus on team defense, an up-tempo game where every player on the floor can score. Red Cloud will start three seniors, Christian McGhee at the point, Billy Scott at the three position and Art Vitalis at the two guard. Junior Mike Twiss will start at the five and sophomore Carl Swallow will go both two and four.

Seniors Lester Gotheridge and Dave Giago will come off the bench with sophomore Jeremy Blacksmith and freshman Kiley Weston. As Rama says, we are not where we want to be by the end of the season but we are ready for the tourney, we have an experienced crew and we will play defense, a very strong defense. Red Cloud was rated number one in the first South Dakota Sports-writers poll, number two in the KSFY /KWSN poll and now number three in the South Dakota Newspaper Association poll.

White River should play Pine Ridge or Cheyenne Eagle Butte in the second round on Thursday, they will play Todd County or Little Wound in the semis. Red Cloud opens with Crazy Horse on Wednesday and will probably play Custer on Thursday and if they get past Larry Luitjen's team, they will face Standing Rock or Oh Day Aki to get to the championship.

"A minute after last year's LNI was over I started looking forward to this year's tourney," said Tally Plume, sports broadcaster for KILI Radio and parent of James Plume, a freshman on the Red Cloud team, "this last month, I can't believe how much I have looked forward to this tournament, I can't wait for it to start."

LNI celebrates 25th girl's tournament

Pine Ridge looks to repeat as LNI champ, has won 10 of the 24 tourneys

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

RAPID CITY - The Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes knocked off Cheyenne Eagle Butte last year 63-33 for their tenth LNI championship in 24 years; in late September the Lady Thorpes were named the number one seed of the girl's tourney. Pine Ridge opens the 25th tourney against the Crazy Horse Lady Chiefs on Wednesday at 10 a.m. in the Civic Center. With wins over St. Francis and Little Wound, they are 2-0 and ranked fifth in Class A girls in the South Dakota Newspaper Association most recent poll.

Pine Ridge is missing Robin Webber, graduation, Nichelle Red Owl, transfer and Christian Janis, health but they have added a future Hall of Fame coach as Dusty LeBeau returns to the sidelines this year after stepping down because of the health of his wife Tess four years ago.

Pine Ridge will not be without challengers though, Cheyenne Eagle Butte also comes into the tourney with a 2-0 record, with a new coach, Alissa Kingfisher Benoist and a young but salty team ready to better their runner-up finish last year. The Lady Braves have a strong inside game with junior Jessica Keckler, two young sophomores who started all last year, Nadia Watt and Lacy Leaf and a host of young and up and coming players ready to fill the void left by the graduation of Brittany Azure and Jordyn Brown.

Standing Rock has opened the year with five straight wins and is led by freshman phenom, Shauna Long, who is averaging 21 points a game from her guard position. Red Cloud is the number three seed and returns all of the players who helped the team to the State A tourney last year. Marque Lunderman, a 5'8" junior is back ready to pick up where she left off last year, averaging close to 18 points a game and eight rebounds. Seniors Ida Clark and Lisa Bear Robe blossomed last year and are ready to finish their high school career on a high note, Lisa on the boards and Ida providing a solid offense to augment Lunderman and a stifling defense. Shaina Clifford has moved from the point to the three position and will be free to score at will. Junior Desiree Blacksmith takes over the point and Casara Pine and sophomore Kristy Boltz will be strong players off the bench. The Lady Crusaders beat Little Wound 64-59 on the road to open the season.

Little Wound could very well be the best 0-3 team in the state losing to Red Cloud, Pine Ridge and Bennett County to open the season. The Lady Mustangs feature Nichelle Red Owl at the shooting guard position, Red Owl returned from spending two years at Pine Ridge, she will average close to 20 points a game. Kirsten Clifford, a 5'11" sophomore will only get better this year after a sterling freshman year; Clifford pulled down 21 rebounds and scored 12 against last year's state runner-up Bennett County on Monday night. Kanisha Rooks, a sophomore point guard will get much stronger as the year progresses and Dakota Flying Hawk, 5'9" freshman, will get more and more minutes as she gets used to Ted Standing Soldier's system.

This year's LNI girl's tournament is probably the most balanced it has been in a long while, Pine Ridge is the number one seed and the defending champ but St. Francis and Standing Rock will challenge them on their way to the championship game. On the other side of the bracket, Cheyenne Eagle Butte will have to fend off Little Wound and Red Cloud to get a rematch of last year's championship game. And once there are two teams in the championship game, its all up for grabs, it goes to the team who wants it the most, who works the hardest, it should be a great tournament.

"In the end, it's extra effort that separates a winner from second place. But winning takes a lot more than that, too. It starts with complete command of the fundamentals. Then it takes desire, determination, discipline, and self-sacrifice. And finally, it takes a great deal of love, fairness and respect for your fellow man. Put all these together, and even if you don't win, how can you lose?"

Red Cloud Indian School teams earn top seeds for 2007 LNI

By Tina Merdanian
Red Cloud Indian School

RAPID CITY - At the September meeting to determine the seeding of the teams for LNI, Red Cloud Indian School boys team was ranked the number one seed.

Last year Red Cloud's only losses were to St. Thomas More and Little Wound, teams which played for the South Dakota State A Championship in March and Chadron, Neb., which played for the Nebraska State B championship. The Red Cloud Crusaders' entire starting lineup is returning composed of Christian McGhee, Billy Scott, Lester Gotheridge, Dave Giago and Art Vitalis are returning as well as Mike Twiss, a 6'3" junior and two talented sophomores, Bryer Iron Cloud and Carl Swallow. During the off season, the boys' team participated in several tournaments including Gillette, Wyoming and Denver, Colo., in the spring. In June and July the team traveled 8,000 miles playing 51 games earning a 45-6 record with a final game in Washington D.C. They are off to a good start with their first game win against Bennett County.

The Red Cloud girl's team is seeded number three in the tournament. The team comepeted in the state tournament last spring as a young team with no seniors on their roster. Returning this year are seniors, Ida Clarke and Lisa Bear Robe, outstanding juniors, Marque Lunderman, joined by, Desirae Blacksmith, Danielle Locust and Shaina Clifford. The Lady Crusaders' new coach is Jerome LeBeau, a 1995 graduate of Red Cloud who was a member and leader on the Red Cloud State A championship Team in 1995.

According to the KSFY/KWSN Rankings Red Cloud Boys Basketball team is ranked number two in the state. According to the South Dakota Newspaper Association, the high school basketball polls for the week of Dec. 10. Red Cloud Boys number 4 and the Red Cloud Girls team is ranked number 9 in the state.

With all the rating polls indicating both Red Cloud's basketball teams are in state, there is only one score that is important to Red Cloud student athletes, and that is the their grade point average. Red Cloud basketball coaches work with the schools to make sure the students are not only competitive on the courts but in the classroom as well.

Bennett County spanks Little Wound, 62-50

KYLE - Keely Krolikowski picked up the ball Monday night and wouldn't let anyone else play with it as she led Bennett County to their fourth straight win 62-50 to open the season, finishing with 36 points, seven rebounds and two steals.

Krolikowski, a 5'8" senior guard who has signed to play ball for Black Hills State next year, set the tone for the game with 11 points in the first quarter while Kanisha Rooks scored six to help keep Little Wound in the game as they were down only 15-14 after one. Keely added eight more points in the second and Bobbie Porch scored six to push the Lady Warriors to a 33-23 halftime lead.

Bennett County had six players contribute scoring in the third as they pushed their lead to 47-30 and the end of three. Bennett County opened the fourth with their largest lead of the night 48-30 only to see Little Wound put on a rally and closed the gap to 49-41 as Nichelle Red Owl reeled off nine quick points but the Lady Warriors, behind Krolikowski's 12 points went right back up 60-43 before wining it 62-50.

"We knew that it was going to be a tough start to our season playing Red Cloud and Bennett County, two teams that went to State last year and Pine Ridge, a team that went 21-1 last year," said Ted Standing Soldier, Jr., Little Wound's coach who helped lead Red Cloud to State last year in his first year as a high school coach, "we definitely have a sense of what we need to work on and we know we can stay and compete with these older and more experienced teams."

Kirsten Clifford, a 5'11" sophomore for Little Wound, led all players with 21 rebounds, she added 12 points and two assists along the way. Red Owl finished with 20 points and Rooks had nine before fouling out with 11 seconds left in the game. The Lady Mustangs are 0-3 and open the Lakota Nation on Wednesday against Hill City.

Bennett County is coming off a 24-2 season and a second place finish in the State A tourney, they are now 5-0 this season and host Stanley County on Thursday, Dec. 27.

Standing Rock brings 5-0 record to Lakota Nation

LINTON - In an earlier unreported game at the end of November, Shauna Long, a 5'2" freshman, led her Standing Rock Lady Warriors to a 60-52 win over Strasburg/Zeeland scoring 25 points.

The Lady Warriors are now 5-0 on the season, Shauna Long in averaging just under 21 points a game as the team heads to the LNI on Wednesday.

Standing Rock is the number five seed in this year's Lakota Nation and will play Takini at 4 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 19.

Tusweca Tiospaye uniting the Lakota Dakota Nakota oyate to save the language

By Michael Carlow Jr.
Special to the Times

PINE RIDGE - Tusweca Tiospaye, a publicly supported 501(c)(3) non-profit organization that is devoted to the promotion and strengthening of the Lakota language, will be coordinating a Lakota Dakota Nakota Language Summit to be held in Rapid City next year, Nov. 11 to 13, 2008. The Theme of this summit is "Uniting the Seven Council Fires to Save the Language."

The Language Summit is an effort to unite the Lakota Dakota Nakota Oyate who are now spread out across reservations in South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Montana, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta in a collective and committed effort to save the language. There will be keynote speakers, breakout sessions, panel discussions, and dialogue sessions where ideas, teaching methods, and techniques can be shared.

On the Pine Ridge Reservation, where we are based, we also have a number of events and activities designed to teach and promote the Lakota language and its use:

"Tusweca Tiospaye Lakota Language Classes for children and their families. Classes are scheduled monthly.

"The Tusweca Tiospaye 2nd Annual Lakota Style Hand-game Tournament on April 12, 2008, at the Wolf Creek School Gym.

*The Tusweca Tiospaye 1st Annual Pow-wow on April 25, 2008, at the Wolf Creek School Gym.

"The Tusweca Tiospaye 1st Annual Lakota Culture Camp June 2nd through June 13th, 2008.

Lakota, Dakota, and Nakota language teaching, learning, promotional, and awareness materials are being developed through donation from Nakota Designs, Inc. and a language page on our website is being designed.

To learn more about the Lakota Dakota Nakota Language Summit and Tusweca Tiospaye go to www.tuswecatiospaye.org or call Michael Carlow Jr., Founder and Executive Director of Tusweca Tiospaye at (605) 867-6193. Tusweca Tiospaye is 100 percent Lakota operated, based in Pine Ridge and operates with community and Oglala Sioux Tribal Council support.

Join in the effort to save the language…save the culture…through the voices of our children. Tusweca Tiospaye would love to hear from people, we appreciate and value all inputs, together as a people we can make a difference… as one of our greatest visionaries has said, "Let us put our minds together and see what kind of life we can make for our children." - Tatanka Iyotaka (Sitting Bull).

Hulk Hogan to be at LNI Friday, Dec. 21

RAPID CITY - During this year's 28th Annual Lakota Nation Invitational Tournament world famous wrestler, actor, and media personality Hulk Hogan is expected to present financial assistance to a number of local area non-profit organizations on behalf of Dreamseekers.

Dreamseekers is a newly-formed foundation co-founded by Hogan and National Indian Gaming Association Chairman, Ernie Stevens, Jr. The foundation's goal is to create healthier communities by assisting young American Indians in areas related to health, education, and leadership development.

A few of the organizations receiving assistance from the National Indian Gaming Association and Dreamseekers will include the Lakota Nation Invitational, Oglala Lakota College, SuAnne Big Crow Boys and Girls Club, Sicangu Child and Family Services of the Rosebud Tribe, Cheyenne River Youth Project, Sitting Bull School will take place at the civic center between 4:30 p.m. and 5 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 21.

A few years ago, Hogan approached Stevens about the possibility of building a team in order to positively impact the lives of Native youth throughout Indian country. Last month at the 2007 Global Gaming Expo held in Las Vegas, Nev., details of this historic partnership of Dreamseekers co-founded by Hogan and Stevens were announced. The goal of this new partnership is to raise millions of dollars in assistance for American Indian communities, specifically focusing on efforts to improve healthcare and educational opportunities. "American Indian children are more likely to live in poverty than any other group of children in this country," said Hogan, citing recent U.S. Census Bureau data. He added, "It's time to change that."

Ernie Stevens Jr., chairman of the National Indian Gaming Association and Hulk Hogan, wrestling sensation will be at LNI on Friday, Dec. 21.

Since 2001, Stevens has helped organize an effort to conduct a charity-drive during the holiday season which provides food, toys, and emergency assistance for families and children on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Over the years the Christmas drive has grown and several tribes and communities throughout the Great Plains region also benefit from the event. Stevens, with the assistance from the Sycuan Band of Kumeyaay Nation of California, the Viejas Band of Kumeyaay Indians of California, the Santa Ynez Band of Chumash Indians of California, Table Mountain Rancheria Band of Indians of California, the Mohegan Tribe of Connecticut, the Seminole Tribe of Florida, International Gaming Technology, Rocket Games, and Video Gaming Technologies will contribute to the cause once again this year. Even as we quickly approach Christmas, tribes and organizations continue to donate.

"I would like to personally thank Councilman Max Osceola and the Seminole Tribe of Florida for bringing Hulkamania to Rapid City," said Stevens. He continued, "The partnership between Indian Country working with Hulk Hogan is just the beginning. It is also a great time to inspire American Indian youth everywhere to join with Dreamseekers' effort to provide a great holiday and help make a difference in Indian Country," said Stevens.

The Lakota Nation Invitational Tournament began 28 years ago on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation as a basketball tournament filled with 8 teams. Since then, it has grown to 32 teams and is one of the largest gatherings of students in the nation. According to the Rapid City Chamber of Commerce, this event brings in an estimated $5 million in revenue for the local economy. The National Indian Gaming Association, in conjunction with Dreamseekers and Hulk Hogan will help boost these numbers during the LNI tournament this year.

The National Indian Gaming Association is a non-profit trade association comprised of 184 American Indian Nations and other nonvoting associate members. The mission of NIGA is to advance the lives of Indian people economically, socially and politically. NIGA operates as a clearinghouse and educational, legislative and public policy resource for tribes, policymakers and the public on Indian gaming issues, sovereignty and tribal community development.

American Horse School students display holiday spirit

By Jodi Richards
American Horse School

ALLEN - Santa and his helpers collected change from the middle school students and purchased candy for the Head Start children.

They also made banana bread for the elderly, baked cookies, and distributed some candy. Santa are his helpers were the American Horse School student council.

Donald Standing Elk Jr. who played Santa and his helpers Justin Stone, vice president of the student council, Jessica Yellow Hawk who is secretary, Nailah Washington, Tamarra DuBray, Contessa Vasquez, Loren Ashley, and Dusty Richards are student council members.

On Dec. 17, the Middle School Student Council went to the Pass Creek Head Start. Loren Ashley read the poem The Night Before Christmas all of the students sang: Dashing through the Snow, Feliz Navidad, Deck the Halls, and Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer.

The Head Start Students along with Rhonda Tallman sang Jingle Bells for our students. Nailah, Contessa, and Jessica read the story "The Mouse Before Christmas" then the middle school students handed out candy while all of the children got a hug from Santa.

The students then went over to the elderly center and repeated the program as the elders came to pick up their lunch meals.

Building Healthy Nations training to inspire youth

KYLE - Lakota Funds Oyate Woableza Otipi Program attended Building Healthy Nations Trainer Training at Rapid City for three days of fast pace interactive instruction.

Participants enjoyed the inspirational ideas for savings and finances. Lakota Funds added three more certified Financial Literacy Trainers to their personnel with this training. Participants acquired skills for providing powerful learning techniques used to keep students interest in financial literacy. One of the first goals for the OWOP is to reach our youth of the Oglala Nation with financial literacy. To make this possible there is collaboration with other programs. The promotion of entrepreneurs is an important ingredient to encourage self sufficiency.

Community development and economic development success come together through ownership from community members. Successes of striving and involved native villages come through donating not only dollars, but also donating your time and energy into a community project. Hard work toward a growing program can include research by members. This kind of sweat equity assists the completion of goals. Oglala Nation has millions of dollars of biweekly earnings come right to our reservation, but it leaves this reservation as soon as it hits here.

Our own experts and professionals can be supported and encouraged here on our own reservation by keeping the purchases of products and services here within our own.

These dollars can be recycled through all the businesses and merchants within our reservations. Every one of our districts here on the reservation could have their own services and products produced for their town. Each district could have its own grocery store, restaurant, convenience store, health care facility, elder home, daycare, community transportation service, and others.

Lakota Funds has technical assistance for small business ideas available through our Wawokiye Business Institute Program with the added assistance from our loan program which has five loan products available for clients. Lakota Funds provides one on one business consulting and business planning classes free to interested individuals. Wawokiye Business Institute Director is Jo White, contact her and her staff for more information or assistance for your business idea.

Lakota Tiwahe Family Asset Building is also an option for reservation families, Individual Development Accounts are matched savings accounts for low income people to be used specifically for building assets.

Financial Literacy Classes are alternated with Core Four Business Planning every six weeks Classes, which means when one class is finished another is ready to start. Lakota Fund's New Year will have Core Four Business Planning Class start out at the end of January.

For more information call Lakota Funds at 455-2500, or check out the website at www.lakotafunds.org, or listen to KILI Radio 90.1 FM on Mondays at 3 p.m.

PORCUPINE - The winners Holiday Hoops Classic held at Porcupine were first place: Public Safety Pacers; second place was Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing.

Third place was Little Wound school staff and fourth place was Shannon County School staff.

Man must pay $50,000 to tribe, state and feds for illegal hunting

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) _ A Tripp County outfitter must pay nearly $50,000 in fines and restitution and serve time for illegal hunting.

Kyle Chris Moeller, 50, was sentenced in U.S. District Court in Pierre for violating the federal Lacey Act and unlawfully transporting a trophy bull elk from the Rosebud Indian Reservation, according to court documents.

He owns and operated All About the Hunt, a company that provided guided pheasant and deer hunts, mainly to nonresidents.

Moeller pleaded guilty to two felonies.

His sentence includes 45 days in custody, six months of home confinement, three years of probation, an $18,000 fine, restitution of $15,600 to the state of South Dakota and $16,000 to the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Department of Natural Resources for several deer and elk.

Federal prosecutors said eight men who hunted with Moeller and his outfitting business have also paid fines and restitutions: Mike Sopko of California, $4,000; Bryan Cross of Tennessee, $1,094; Mike Cross of Tennessee, $1,094; Ed Harris of Tennessee, $1,188; Rick Garrison of Tennessee, $1,094; Adam Taylor of Tennessee, $1,063; Tom Tyler of Florida, $1,553; and Paul Mentele of Alexandria, $850.

Oglala Lakota College to receive $2.6 million in funding for Head Start KYLE - On Monday, Dec. 17, Sen. Tim Johnson's office announced Oglala Lakota College's Head Start was awarded $2,659,750 in supplemental funds. The grant will be used to help coordinate early childhood educational opportunities for area kids.

"Every child should have the same opportunities to excel. Head Start builds a strong educational foundation," Johnson said. "This program is one of the best ways to even the educational playing field for kids from low and moderately low-income families."

Head Start programs are designed to provide all children with the opportunity to start their learning process before entering elementary school. The programs provide educational services for young children, as well as resources, training and support for parents.

The grant is awarded by the Department of Health & Human Services.

Judge signs agreement in Winner school lawsuit

ABERDEEN, S.D. (AP) _ U.S. District Judge Charles Kornmann has signed an agreement between the Winner School District and American Indian students who said they were systematically and unfairly punished.

Backed by the American Civil Liberties Union, 10 students and their families sued the school district last year and received class action status on behalf of all Indians students in the district's middle school and high school.

The two sides reached agreement in June, and Kornmann now has approved it.

The settlement will result in several changes intended to improve the achievements of Indian students in the Winner School District. Kornmann will enforce the agreement for four years.

The district admitted no wrongdoing but said it agreed to the settlement to avoid further litigation. It must pay $100,000 to the ACLU for attorney's fees and costs.

A Heart Felt Thank You to all family and friends of Merle "Squirrel" Ashmore Merle passed on September 29,2007. Your prayers, cards and friendly handshake. All your help was greatly appreciated by his mother, brothers, and sisters. All the hard work of cooking and making a great meal, thanks Louise Big Boy for a great 6 am breakfast, pancakes, toast, eggs and ham, sweet roll, coffee and donuts from Jim Christensen. The Angels sang during the wake until wee hours in the morning. Thanks to the Dubray drum group who sang at the wake and grave site. Many thanks to Bill Clifford for all your hard work to make Merle's last wishes complete. Hls last wagon ride adn thanks to all the horse back riders. Sometimes its the little things that makes us feel better. And so this brings a special thanks to Marsha Loafer for a beautiful cross, she made two horse heads hanging by a chain, this work I know came from the heart. Many Thanks to all. From his mother, brother sisters and children.
We are overwhelmed, we see why Merle loved Kyle. Family, relaitives and friends pulled together and made his wishes come true. He also said I want to see the beautiful flowers when I'm alive, not when I"m dead. This wish also happened. From his mother Ramona "Tiny Babe" Ashmore

Red Cloud runs by King Louie, White River Tigers for LNI title

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - After 31 games of the boy's 31st Lakota Nation tourney this past weekend at the Civic Center in Rapid City, Red Cloud and White River started the game fast and furious; Louie Krogman hit 13 of his game high 39 points in the first quarter while Red Cloud senior, Art Vitalis scored all ten of his game points also in the first quarter but the difference was Art had a good deal of help as Dave Giago scored five points, while Carl Swallow and Billy Scott hit for four each as a super team effort led the Crusaders to an 86-66 win over the Tigers for the LNI championship.

At the end of the first quarter, Red Cloud led 27-24, by the half it was 46-42 as Louie kept the game close scoring 22 points in the first half.

"It turns out we were outrebounded in the first half 17-16," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud head coach, "and at halftime we definitely talked about doing a better job on the boards; the message got to the right people, we out rebounded White River 20-10 in the second half, cutting down on their second chances around the hoop."

Swallow, a 6'2" sophomore, hit five shots in the third while Mike Twiss, a 6'3" junior added two twos and a trey to help lead Red Cloud to a 67-55 third quarter lead as the Crusaders started to wear down the Tigers and pull away on the scoreboard. Krogman continued to get his points as he hit for eight in the third and nine more in the fourth but their just wasn't enough help as Matthew Bartlett's 13 was the only other Tiger in double figures. RJ Estes finished with nine while Jake Krogman and Frankie Waln, usually hitting in the double figures were held to two and zero points respectively.

"It was a great team effort, on both offense and defense," said Rama, "they have worked really hard both this fall and through the off-season and now they are seeing the benefits of their work."

Red Cloud finished the game with four players in double figures as Giago hit for 21 points, Swallow had 18, Christian McGhee chipped in 12 and Vitalis added 10. Lester Gotheridge led the team with nine rebounds, added eight points, three assists and two blocked shots; McGhee helped with six assists, two steals and two rebounds while Swallow added six assists.

"We lost to a really good team," said Eldon Marshall, White River coach, "and it will only make us better and motivate us to work that much harder to get ready for the rest of our season."

Red Cloud opened the tournament Wednesday with a 97-48 win over Crazy Horse; led by McGhee's 22 points, 13 Crusaders in all scored points as Red Cloud went up 44-17 at the half. Giago finished with 13, Gotheridge added 12 and Jeremy Blacksmith helped with 10. Crazy Horse was led by Tyson Red Elk's 13 points and Ace Amiotte's 11.

In what was probably the toughest game of the tournament for Red Cloud, Christian McGhee knocked down 15 points, grabbed six rebounds and dished out seven assists to lead Red

RAPID CITY - Pine Ridge left no doubt that they were ready to make it back to back LNI championships and 11th overall as they stormed out to a 17-0 lead over Red Cloud Saturday night as Lacey Weston hit three quick field goals, Aimee Pond added two and Sophia Janis helped with a two and two free throws as the Lady Thorpes used that quick start to win the championship 63-43.

Rosebud electronic company employs 15

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Electronic Integration Corporation is a tribal-owned small disadvantaged business located on the Rosebud Sioux Reservation. Certified as a Native American small disadvantaged business in Februar, REIC was created as a subsidiary of the Rosebud Economic Development Corporation and was chartered in March 2006 to conduct business with the U.S. Army Space and Missile Defense Command for the Advanced Electronic Research Integration Project.

Further, the mission of REIC is to evolve into a viable Native American small business as a part of the vital industrial base of the Department of Defense, other government agencies and commercial manufacturing in the research, development, test and production of advanced electronic circuitry. REIC will produce electronics that are non-toxic thus eliminating the hazardous components and soldering that exists in currently fielded systems.

The project currently employs 15 people and is being housed in the Sicangu Wicoti Awayakapi building. By way of updating the tribal membership the following are some of the accomplishments already realized by the project; REIC installed and trained on prototype assembly test-bed and lab test equipment. It also began research activities to eliminate hazardous substances in electronic circuits. REIC employees are certified in 35 technical and business area, while a REIC policy manual has been generated.

The REIC employees have furthermore obtained electronic technician one-year certificates and received training from the Occupational and Safety and Health Administration from the South Dakota School of Mines & Technology and SDSU.

The groundbreaking for the new AERI facility was held in March 2007. Currently under construction and financed by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, the AERI facility is scheduled for completion in January 2008 with the grand opening set for March 2008. The 10,788 square foot facility will be located in Research Park east of Mission. The funding for the $2 million AERI facility became possible with a $1.1 million Economic Development Administration grant, a $208,000 matching funds grant with the South Dakota Governor's Economic Office Development and Rosebud Sioux Tribe and a $680,000 BIA Guaranteed Loan with Native American Bank, Denver, Colo..

REIC's first fiscal year ended this past September with a profit of over $40,000 and is also the first tribal economic development organization to pay profits back to the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and to REDCO. As the first for-profit tribal organization, REIC's employee benefits include health insurance, life insurance and a matching IRA/401k plan. REIC currently employs 15 people all of whom are Lakota tribal members or lineal descent. These are jobs that were all created in 2007 because of the AERI Project.

LNI: Red Cloud champs

Cloud over Custer 52-35 on Thursday. After fighting to a 13-11 lead at the end of the first quarter, Red Cloud got threes from Swallow and Kiley Weston and two baskets from Gotheridge to lead the Crusaders to a 26-18 halftime lead. Two threes and a two by Vitalis to open the third with a three from Swallow and four points from McGhee helped to open a 43-30 three quarter lead. Gotheridge led the team with seven rebounds while McGhee added six and Swallow accounted for five.

"When you play Custer, you always know you are up for a battle, they are well coached and play super defense," said Rama, "it is always an honor to play a Luitjens coached team which makes it special when you are able to get the win."

Red Cloud got by Standing Rock in the semis on Friday 78-48 to earn the ticket to the championship game on Saturday. Once again, the well conditioned Crusaders broke the game open in the third period as Giago led 11 Red Cloud scorers with 18 points and added eight rebounds while Gotheridge finished with 12 points, seven rebounds and six assists; McGhee added his all around game scoring seven with seven assists and five steals. Derrick Iron Shield led Standing Rock with 17 points, Kyle Claymore added 11 points and six rebounds.

White River's road to the championship game included a 98-69 win over Lower Brule in the first game; Krogman hit for 39 points, Jake Krogman had 15, Waln had 14, Estes hit for 10 while Bartlett chipped in six points with 18 rebounds. Will Edwards led Lower Brule with 21 points, Ron Knudson finished with 20 and Eltwin Grassrope had 10. In the quarters, White River knocked off Pine Ridge 87-52 as Krogman scored 28 points, breaking the all time South Dakota individual scoring record with 1:16 left in the first half. Waln added 18 and Estes 13.

In the semis, the Tigers faced a strong Todd County team but Krogman led four Tigers in double figures with 30 points as White River led at each quarter break to win it 76-65. Bartlett chipped in 14 points and 13 rebounds, Jake Krogman helped with 14 points and Waln added 10 points. Jordan His Law led a talented Falcon contingent with 27 points and seven rebounds, Gunner Krogman helped out with 15 points and Mark DuBray chipped in 10 points and a team high 11 rebounds.

"After the game, I told the team to go ahead and celebrate the LNI championship tonight and on Sunday, but on Monday morning we are going back to work," said Rama, "we have Lead-Deadwood on Thursday and Platte-Geddes on Saturday, we are only just getting started."

Todd County took third, leading at every quarter mark on the way to a 66-41 win over Standing Rock. Mark DuBray led the Falcons with 20 points, Canku One Star added 15 points and nine rebounds while His Law helped with 14 points.

Custer knocked off Pine Ridge for fifth as Iasaac Parsons hit for 28 pints and a team high nine rebounds, Jared Foote added 14 points. The Thorpes were led by Eric Long's six points and Shawn Keith's five rebounds. Little Wound grabbed seventh place with a 81-65 win over Takini as Spur Pourier led the Mustangs with 36 points and Brice Hornbeck chipped in 21. Takini's Cory Condon hit for 14 points and Kills Crow added eight rebounds.

Flandreau Indian took the Pasha Sapa bracket title with a 67-48 win over Hill City. Sterling Drapeau hit for 17, Ryan Wellette helped with 16 and Tony St. John added 13. Hudson Koel led Hill City with 23.

The MVP award went to Louie Krogman of White River. Additional awards included: Mr. Hustle to Tony St. John of Flandreau, Mr. Defense/Brice Hornbeck of Little Wound, Playmaker to Isaac Parsons of Custer, Individual Sportsmanship to Kiko Mendoza of Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Outstanding Coach to Matt Rama of Red Cloud, most threes and most points to Louie Krogman and most rebounds to Demetrius Martin of Oh Day Aki.

Krogman breaks state record, honored at LNI

On Thursday night, the quarterfinal game between White River and Pine Ridge was stopped at the 1:16 mark of the second quarter to allow awards to be presented to Louie Krogman who broke Don Jacobson's 50 year old individual scoring record for all classes in South Dakota; in addition to a star quilt, a jacket and a plate, Louie received a Lakota name of Nagi Ohitika, Fearsome Spirit, during an honoring song.

against each other, Dusty LeBeau back at the wheel in Pine Ridge and son Jerome stepping into the coach's box for Red Cloud, the Crusaders looked nervous and fought most of the night to find a rhythm, one they used to sail through the earlier rounds of the tourney. In the end they would close the gap to eight points but Pine Ridge would use their superior inside-out-side game to put the lead into double digits.

Pine Ridge dominated the boards, out-rebounding Red Cloud 47-26 giving away very few second chance baskets. Pine Ridge got a surprise game out of Sioux Dawn Janis as she hit four of five from three point range for 16 points. Weston fouled out with 2:46 to go in the fourth but finished with 12 points and eight rebounds; Keisha Brewer added 11 points and 14 rebounds while Alliey Janis helped out with nine points, eight rebounds and four steals. Shaina Clifford was the only Crusader in double figures with 12 while Marque Lunderman helped out with eight points and five rebounds.

The two coaches had a bet going that if they were in the championship game, they would both wear a tie; Jerome wore a bright blue one while his dad Dusty was chafing under a tie tucked under a sweater. The coaches hugged out in front of the scorer's table before the game, then it was all business.

With the win, Pine Ridge has opened the 2007/2008 season with six straight wins and will play Marty on Jan. 4 while Red Cloud is now 4-1 and will travel to Redfield on Thursday and Winner to play Platte-Geddes on Saturday.

"It was a good learning experience for the girls, we will get better from the loss," said LeBeau, "we play again on Feb. 9 in Rapid City and we'll see how far we have come along since the LNI championship, it's a tool to get ready for the postseason."

Pine Ridge opened the tourney on Wednesday with a 76-16 win over Crazy Horse, Lacey Weston led all scorers with 15, Brianna Big Crow, a freshman hit for 14 and Alliey Janis, another freshman added 10. The Lady Thorpes grabbed 60 rebounds as Aimee Pond led with 11, Shaina Lays Bad helped with 10 and Keisha Brewer helped with 10 as well. Kassy Randall led Crazy Horse with eight. The Lady Thorpes came back with a 51-27 quarterfinal win over Custer. Keisha Brewer led the way with 12 points, Weston and Sophia Janis added 11 apiece as well. In the semis, Pine Ridge defeated St. Francis for the second time this year 77-61.

Red Cloud made quick work of Lower Brule in their first game on Wednesday as Marque Lunderman hit for 18 points, Saige Pourier helped out with 12 points and a team high seven rebounds, Shaina Clifford chipped in 13 points, Josey Johnson hit three threes for 14 points and Ida Clarke added 13. In the quarters, Red Cloud outlasted Todd County 60-42 as Lunderman led the way with 22 points. In the semis, Red Cloud took out a tough Cheyenne Eagle Butte team 56-48.

The Lady Braves downed St. Francis for third Jessica Keckler leading the way with 17 points, Lacy Leaf 10 points and Nadia Watt seven points and seven rebounds. The Lady Braves were led by Marci Rodriguez, Jessica Rouillard and Roseanne Eagle Road, all with 11 points. Little Wound knocked off Standing Rock for fifth as four Lady Mustangs hit double figures, Tawnie Shay Hunter with 14, Nichelle Red Owl 13, Kirsten Clifford 10 and Kanisha Rooks 10 with Clifford adding eight boards.

Todd County finished seventh with a 37-35 win over Custer as Shelby Hunger led the Lady Falcons with 11 points and seven rebounds.

White River won the Paha Sapa bracket with a 82-32 win over Crow Creek; Caitlin Whiting ripped the nets for 26 points, Maci Gillen added 13 and Shelby Horsely helped with 10; Kaylee Spotted Elk led the way with 11 rebounds.

Lacey Weston won the MVP, Shauna Long/Standing Rock was Ms. Defense, Sophia Janis/Pine Ridge was Ms. Hustle, Marque Liunderman/Red Cloud was playmaker, Sioux Dawn Janis/Pine Ridge was Individual Sportsmanship and Dusty LeBeau was the outstanding coach. Most threes went to Shauna Long/Standing Rock, most points went to Kali Brave of St. Francis and most rebounds went to Faline Headley of Flandreau Indian.

All tourney awards went to Lacey Weston/Pine Ridge, Marque Lunderman/Red Cloud, Jessica Keckler/CEB, Shelby Hunger/Todd County, Caitlin Whiting/White River, Sasha Ross/Crow Creek, Nicole Bryant/Custer, Nichelle Red Owl/Little Wound, Kassie Randall/Crazy Horse, Steph Burleson/Hill City, Kayla Turning Heart/Takini.

2007: A year in review

Marlon "Moon" Weston passed away on New Year 's Day at his home in Porcupine. Weston was elected five consecutives times to the Oglala Sioux tribal council from his home district of Porcupine. He was chair of the of OST land committee, the health and human services committee and served on the Red Cloud school board as well as the Porcupine Clinic board.

The RST Liquor Commission revoked the license of the Prairie Hills Golf Club during a joint hearing on the club's back taxes owed to the tribe. No one appeared on behalf of the business as a vote was taken and then the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services carried out a "cease and desist" order effectively closing the establishment.

The Little Wound Mustangs scored 42 points in the fourth quarter to beat the Todd County Falcons and earn a number two ranking in the state. TCHS' Gunner Krogman finished the game with 23 points and 14 rebounds, while Brice Hornbeck lead the Mustangs with 21 points and four steals. The Mustangs were fresh from an LNI championship over the St. Thomas More Crusaders and a 7-0 start as they attained a number two ranking.

The statute of limitations for tribes to file claims based upon their Arthur Andersen Reports was extended until December 31. The American Indian Reform Act in 1994 required a full and accounting of their trust fund accounts and the firm of McCarter and English apparently attempted to capitalize on the situation by filing on behalf of several Sioux tribes. Unfortunately, the firm tied the claim to the Black Hills and this alarmed many of the Sioux tribes as attorney Mario Gonzalez explained that he and several attorneys had already filed a claim on behalf of several Lakota tribes.

Sinte Gleska University re-enacted the inauguration of President, Lionel R. Bordeaux who had led the university for 34 years and is probably the nation's longest running chief executive officer. During the 37th Annual Founder's Day celebration Bordeaux recounted the desire of SGU Founding Chairman, Stanley Red Bird, to recruit a fluent Sicangu Lakota to lead the institution. Bordeaux is an influential guiding force behind the tribal college movement.

The Little Wound Lady Mustangs with a 11-0 record were ranked number one in the state along with the Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes. According to Roger Toland, sports editor for the Rapid City Journal, it was the first time two Pine Ridge teams had been ranked number one at the same time. The Lady Thorpes have been to the state tournament seven times and won it once, while the Lady Mustangs have been there once. The Pine Ridge Thorpes boys team has been to state 18 times and have won it three times.

Former RST council representative, Seth Big Crow, 68 died at his home in Upper Cut Meat community. Big Crow's body lay in state at the RST council chambers and interment was the family's tiospaye near Parmelee. As a descendant of Chief Crazy Horse he was a defender of the Crazy Horse name and successfully defended it in court against several brewing companies.

A six-week program designed to empower Lakota women will be available beginning February 19. The program is designed with cultural healing methods and was funded at $298,000 with a grant from the Administration for Native Americans. The project entitled "Win Ki Igluonihanipi" The center located in Kyle will provide a healing center that will support Lakota women, their partners and family in seeking a balance and healthy lifestyle.

RST court hears case of St. Francis Indian School versus St. Francis Mission. Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc. the corporate arm of SFIS received a bequest from the Delores Cerro Trust Fund of Bakersfield, CA in the amount of $1.5 million. The money is to be used for scholarship support and capital improvements. The court upheld the claim that the school as a chartered entity enjoys sovereign immunity, and thus, is immune from suit. A motion for an injunction by SFM was denied and the case was to be heard in tribal court.

The City of Martin was ordered by Chief Judge Karen Shcrier to adopt a redistricting plan entitled Remedial Plan C. The plan involves adopting an at-large voting scheme with cumulative voting. During 2007 the city will have six council members, but staggered in 3-3 cycles. The case is known as Cottier and Three Star versus the City of Martin. Plan C helps to remedy the Section 2 violation of the Voting Rights Act and gives Lakota people a chance to elect a Lakota during each cycle.

Nellie Two Bulls died at the Rapid Regional Hospital to join her husband, Matt, of 54 years. Two Bulls, an educator, singer, mother and grandmother was cited along with her husband as tremendous and valuable resources when it came to Lakota music. The couple was employed at Red Cloud School for 20 years where they taught Lakota music and language. Their original drum group was the Sons of the Oglalas and included the late Calvin Jumping Bull.

St. Francis Mission dropped its claim in RST tribal court to the $1.5 million bequest from the Delores Cerro Fund. The court said that the school enjoyed sovereign immunity as a tribally chartered entity and that it had not been waived. SFM claimed that an agreement in 1984 should prevail, however, the court said that SFM did not have an exclusive right to receive gifts from the Cerro trust fund.

Two months after undergoing emergency brain surgery in a Washington, DC hospital, Sen. Tim Johnson was moved to a rehabilitation center. The senator was rushed to the George Washington University hospital on Dec. 13 for the surgery. His condition was upgraded from critical to fair on January 19. Johnson has weakness on his right side and the physical therapy is expected to take a couple of months. He plans to run for re-election in 2008.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe's new 58,000 square foot adult offenders facility is set for a formal grand opening on March 2 at 10:00 a.m. The facility is located south of Pine Ridge and will take prisoners in March. Speakers at the ceremony were to include OST President, John Steele Len Chester, BIA facility program specialist, James Twiss, chief of police and Jeanne Whirlwind Horse, captain of corrections.

The Little Wound Mustangs clobbered the Bennett County Warriors 122 to 44 in the first round of the District 14-A play. With the second win over the Warrior the Mustangs pushed their record to 20-1 and moved onto the District 14A championship. The Mustangs are looking for their second straight trip to the state A tournament.

The Bush administration proposed a $7 billion settlement over the management of trust lands and it was met by objections from tribal plaintiffs. The decade old issue alleges that the government has mismanaged more than a billion dollars in gas, oil and timber and other royalties dating back to 1887. Senator Byron Dorgan said that it was the first time the government acknowledged a multi-billion dollar liability for mismanagement of trust funds and that he planned to hold hearings.

KILI was back on the air on April 23. The old antenna had been hit by lightening in mid April 2006; KILI received a $300,000 grant from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and the Department of Commerce. New transmission lines, a back-up generator and a new antenna will enable the station to eventually operate at 100,000 watts. KINI can also be accessed on the World Wide Web at www.kiliradio.org and relied on the internet while it was out of service.

The Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Tribal Land Enterprise successfully bid on 800 acres of land in southeastern Todd County. The land known as the Zibell Estate was purchased for a total of $1,250.00 per acre at a total cost of $1,000.000. The successful bid appeared to take tribal members by surprise as many such transactions often yield only $300 per acre for many sellers.

Wanblee will finally realize its dream of building a facility to house an ambulance and emergency medical technicians around the clock. In April the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux community granted a request of $75, 441.00 to build a facility with two bays, office space, sleeping quarters, lounge and a commons area.

Cangleska, Inc. celebrated the grand opening of a new shelter on May 4. It also celebrated ten years as the first Native American women's shelter on the Pine Ridge. The 7,800 square foot shelter will house up to 36 women and children as well as office and administrative space for counseling services.

Dr. Richard Bordeaux retired after 32 years in Indian education. He Dog School hosted an honoring wacipi with a traditional meal of buffalo stew, fry bread and wojapi. Bordeaux led the Todd County School District for 16 years and was name the Outstanding Indian Educator of the Year by the SD Indian Education Assn in 1992.

On May 10 the Rosebud Sioux tribal council voted by a margin of 10-2 to suspend the charter of St. Francis Indian School. The RST Education Committee presented a list of concerns that SFIS was to respond to on May 25. As a chartered entity of RST there is precedence for such action and the charter and by-laws would be re-enacted at a later date.

Red Cloud High School has had 17 Gates Millennium Scholars over the last three years and leads all other tribal schools in the nation. Little Wound School, Todd County, Dupree and Marty all have three this year, while Crow Creek and Lower Brule have one. The scholarship requires a grade point average of 3.3 and will potentially fund a student through a doctoral degree.

The Indian Health Service plans to replace Sioux San Hospital with a new facility, however, the changes are years away. It was singled out in 1992 by the I.H.S. as requiring a new facility. Two plans will be considered, one is to demolish some of the buildings and confine services to one building or renovating the existing structure. An 82 page Program Justification Document was approved last Sep.

Dave "Bulldog" Michaud was awarded the Jim Thorpe award at Pine Ridge High School for lettering in three sports for four years. His 4.0 grade point average and 19 varsity letters and selection as valedictorian also earned him a Gates Millennium Scholarship.

On June 18, the Winner and Ideal Native American community reached an agreement with the Winner School District to settle a class action lawsuit. The case Antoine v. Winner School District was brought by the American Civil Liberties Union and which cited the district for a high Native student drop out rate and having higher detention rates than white students.

Oglala Lakota College held its 34th annual graduation and awarded 168 degrees, 8 masters and 43 bachelor degrees. The college also sponsored a graduation wacipi in which 110 dancers and 13 drum groups participated. Stan Adelstein delivered the commencement address.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe is working to finance the cost to bring at least 270 trailer houses that FEMA originally purchased for those hit by hurricane Katrina in Louisiana and Missippi. Sen. Tim Johnson led a legislative initiative to allow FEMA to sell or donate trailers to reservation communities.

Fireworks caused over 400 fires and burned 24,000 acres on the Pine Ridge reservation. The Kyle fire and others at Calico and Slim Buttes kept volunteer fire departments from Martin, Batesland, Rushville, Vetal, Tuthill and busy along with the BIA fire fighters from Winnebago, Yankton, Crow Creek, Standing Rock, Fort Berthold, Rosebud and Spirit Lake.

Fr. John Hatcher of the St. Francis Mission addressed the Rosebud Sioux tribal council on July 12. Hatcher provided an update of services provided by SFM, including a Nativity School, online study courses and a commitment to alcohol recovery and Lakota language acquisition. Hatcher said his responses to a range of charges about his conduct were contained in a packet given to the council.

August 2007

The Oglala Nation pow-wow saw 350 dancers and 28 drum groups help to celebrate the late summer's festivities. Friday's parade feature 80 floats and honored Marlin "Moon" Weston and Nellie Two Bulls. Lisa Bear Robe a senior at Red Cloud High School was selected as the new Miss Oglala Nation.

Honoring the Elders is the theme for the 131st annual Rosebud Fair. The fair which began on Aug. 24 through Aug. 26 featured prize money of $70,000. Ted Felix is chair of the wacipi committee and expected to see more than 600 dancers as Lt. Col. Kathy Prue-Owen was scheduled to be honored.

September 2007

Indian tribes and school were successful in reaching a settlement for stopping the planned re-organization of the Office of Indian Education. Education line offices and resources that support contract, grant and BIA schools will remain on reservations according to attorney Charles Abrourezk who was the lead attorney in the litigation. The move would have cost $11 million and would have taken money from two programs serving Indian children.

Oglala Lakota College was the recipient of a collection of 300 CD's and audio tapes originally recorded over 25 years ago. The collection came from the family of the late James E. Emery who was originally from Rosebud. Some of the recordings captured conversations with Ben Black Elk, Frank Fools Crow, Dewey Beard and other prominent Lakota leaders.

Eight month old infant, Briar Brown Bull-Martinez died in a one vehicle accident four and a half miles north of Highway 18 on Allen road. The cost to rebuild the old road which is in bad shape is estimated to be $8 million and the state has $2 million earmarked for the project.

The RST Suicide Task Force hosted a four directions evening walk to bring awareness to the ten suicides which have occurred mostly among Sicangu Lakota youth. Tillie Black Bear, Duane Martin, Sr., and Sicangu medicine man, Leonard Crow Dog led the event as the children in attendance were honored with a drink of water and prayers.

St. Francis Indian School is planning a ribbon cutting ceremony to mark the completion of the high school building. The dignitaries to be invited include, RST president Rodney Bordeaux, former SFIS superintendent, Cheryl Crazy Bull and Gordon Rosby the inspector for the BIA.

The Red Cloud Crusaders and the Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes were seeded number one in the Lakota Nation Invitational tournament held at the Rushmore Civic Plaza on Dec. 19-22. Last year the Lady Thorpes earned 30 point wins in each of their LNI games and went undefeated during the regular season. They met Bennett County for the District 14A championship where they lost.

The Lakota Women for Change held an RST candidates forum during the week of October 18 at Antelope community as incumbents Robert Moore, Jo Colombe and Scott Herman were joined by Teddi Rae Herman, Trent Poignee and Shawn Bordeaux. The LWFC created a set of question which were posed by Dorothy Marshall while some 50 community members looked on.

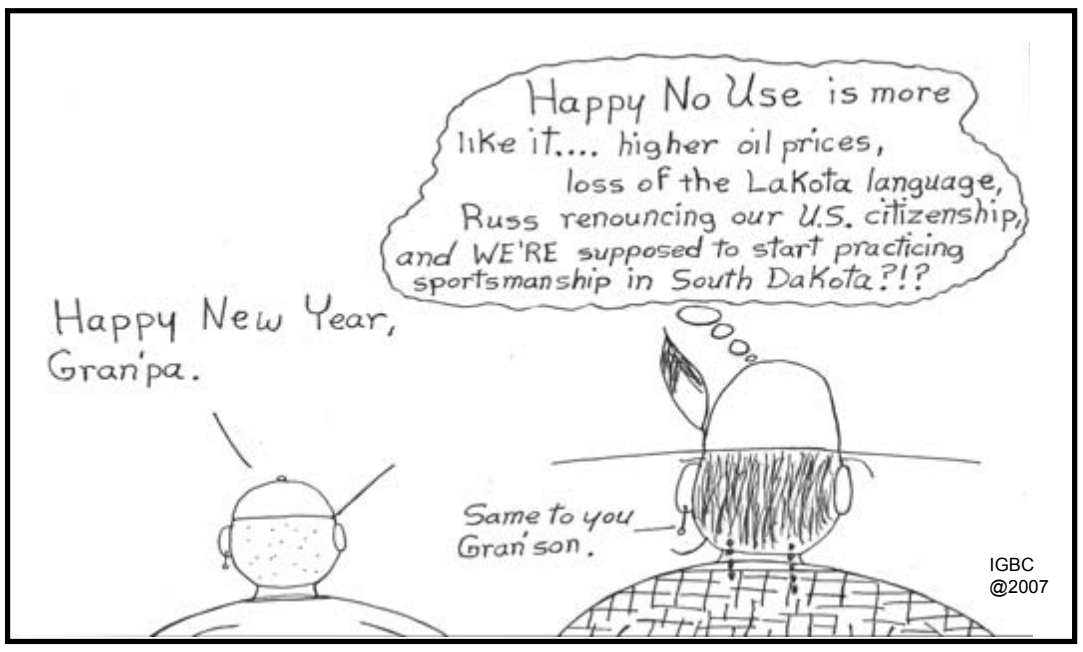
November 2007

The RST supreme court granted an appeal to the Rosebud Sioux tribe in which it sought to recover $399,353.00 from BBC, Inc. The management firm was hired to operate the Rosebud Casino for five years and was accused of paying itself more than it should have from casino profits. RST was represented by attorney, Dana Hanna.

Longtime journalist, Tim Giago is to be inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame on Nov. 10 on the campus of SDSU. Giago, an Oglala Sioux was the very successful owner and editor of three Indian newspapers including, the original Lakota Times, Indian Country Today and the Lakota Journal. He attended Harvard on a prestigious Neiman Fellowship in Journalism in 1990.

On Nov. 16 Sen. Tim Johnson sent a letter posing several questions about the suicide epidemic currently plaguing the Lakota tribes on the northern plains to Indian Health Service director, Robert McSwain. Johnson asked the agency for more mental health services in order to provide prevention, intervention and aftercare services. Nov. 17 was the National Day of Observance for Survivors of Suicide.

December 2007



Wolf Creek students Corina Sitting Bear, Naomi Evans and Shawna Rowland were honored for saving the life of kindergarten student, Tiana Kohluf.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe's transportation program headed by Jeff Whalen said it used an asphalt zipper to patch a small stretch of Allen road that was the location of a recent accident which killed an infant. The transportation program has been meeting with Bennett County officials and the state in making plans to fix the dangerous nine mile stretch of road. OST has $2.5 million earmarked for the road, while Bennett County has $2 million. Whalen said it would take $8 million to fix the road.

In a historic voting rights case Charles Mix County reached an agreement on Dec. 4 with the American Civil Liberties Union that will require the county to get approval from the federal government before implementing new voting laws through 2024. The ACLU lawsuit charged the county with discriminating against Native voters.

Floyd Westerman had a strong spirit

Amanda Takes War Bonnett

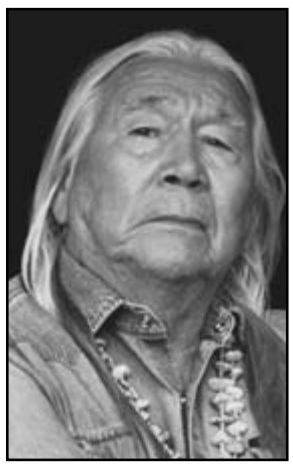
Back in February of this year, I had the opportunity to visit Floyd Westerman about his new CD he had released. It was a tribute to Johnny Cash and was a remake of Cash's songs. Westerman told me I should write something on his other music, the ones that came out in 1970s, the lyrics of those had more powerful meaning for the Indian people.



Westerman recently died and was buried back at his home near Sisseton. His words helped me and I want to share them.

I knew Westerman was a spiritual man, he had a healing nature about him with his words. As I spoke to him, I took notes. That is part of being a journalist, a habit, always taking notes. It was a good talk, I learned a lot from that conversation. He spoke of his songs and the meaning of the words. His songs were the war cry for the American Indian Movement. He said the Earth is our bible and in the Bible it doesn't emphasize much on taking care of Mother Earth and his songs on the environment relayed that emphasis, he said.

"The Earth is our mother and is sacred and we need to take care of it for the children," he said. "The Earth is the Bible for the Indian people, that is why there is a big serious gap, man has these attitudes that he owns Earth, that is not so, man belongs to the Earth, these attitudes are brought on to a point now, where the future of our children are threatened, all the church people now are saying we must do something about this. They should have done this centuries ago. It might be a lesson too late for the learning."

"Indian people have to take a global view of what is happening around the world, not just our peoples at Pine Ridge or at Sisseton.

It affects us now as we speak, we need to understand and need to be aware of what is happening daily in this whole hemisphere, it was all Indian at first, more than twenty million Indian people, including Alaska and Canada.

He said by the beginning of World War II, Indian people were almost exterminated and yet we still fight to keep the culture and tradition alive.

"When you lose your song, your dance and your language, you cease to be a people. That is what determines your sovereignty," he emphasized.

"When you have your own language, your own spiritual ways, including the songs and dances, the sundance, then you are sovereign people but if we lost that, then we cease to be a people."

"That is why there is such a big effort to bring the language back here, it needs to be an immersion of the people, with all other Indian nations they are doing the same things," he said.

He spoke of the history of Native Americans and the holocaust they suffered in losing their land, language and the struggles of regaining their ways.

"Indian people need to go back to their traditional way, a lot are doing that. A lot of young people aren't reading into the present religions. I see more and more young Indian people picking up the Pipe and that is our answer. I sun danced for 12 years through the late 70s and 80s

My understanding is what we are supposed to do, how I am suppose to look at things. So many Indian people have not even tried to do that. I have been to Red Shirt Table and Moves Camps sun dances,

"We have lost a lot in our spirituality and we have to cherish, protect and grow that back into our people.

"The Inipi goes along with this. Inipi is spirituality, sundance is spirituality and there is the Cannupa and the story of that. Black Elk spoke of the White Buffalo Calf Woman, she brought that Pipe with instructions on how to be and live on this Earth, how to be to each other.

"People are lost in drugs, bad diet and alcohol. Our way of life has been corrupted in those things.

Means' empty gesture still makes point

The following column was written by Dorreen Yellow Bird of the Grand Forks Herald and was reprinted by permission.

A group of Lakota Indians notified the State Department in Washington this week that, in the words of activist Russell Means, "We are no longer citizens of the United States of America, and all those who live in the five-state area that encompasses our country are free to join us."

In my humble opinion, I think THAT ship has sailed.

As I sat and pondered the possibilities of American Indian independence, my first thought was, "Yikes, I'd need a green card to live in Grand Forks!"

Of the people who called or e-mailed me, most are chuckling at the absurdity of it. Means and his group, of course, would be speaking for themselves and not tribes, whose tribal councils speak for them. But Means and his group have some points - perhaps 200 years too late, but they do have some points.

The land grabs that made Indian country shrink into mostly small land areas involved territory taken mostly "by hook and by crook." And if you look at many reservations, they are in areas unwanted at the time - rough terrain such as the Badlands of the Dakotas, poor land for growing gardens and in isolated areas.

The "forefathers" who made those decisions get the last laugh. On the Navajo reservation, uranium was found, making what was thought fairly worthless land rich. Some other reservations are in isolated areas that have become tourist attractions. And in North Dakota, the Three Affiliated Tribes' reservation sits in the middle of the oil fields of the Bakken Formation.

There also are those tribes near big cities - the Shakopee, Passamaquoddy and so on - who have become casino-rich.

Many tribal leaders were not on the same page as the settlers who came for land. When the land was taken or signed over, most of the tribal leaders were surprised because land, they believed, was assumed to belong to the Creator. Only the Creator, not any one person, had dominance over the Earth, they thought.

Two different ways of thinking.

Then, there's the contention that this country was won by settlers in war.

Ah, I don't think so. There were wars, but you really can't say that sending soldiers with guns and horses into a camp of women and children is war. That's a massacre.

In the very early days, tribes won more battles than they lost. The battles they lost were to contagious diseases brought by those European visitors. The diseases killed millions of people, leaving the Indian people devastated. Some tribes disappeared completely.

In later years, there were retaliations, raids and skirmishes, some of them just to keep the young and elderly from starving. Examples that come to mind are the Sioux Uprising or the Outbreak of 1862 in Minnesota, the Sand Creek Massacre in Colorado and Wounded Knee in South Dakota.

The Sioux Uprising was a result of promises not kept. The Dakota were starving, and they raided a farmhouse and killed some the inhabitants. Two hundred Indians were rounded up and sentenced to death, whether they were guilty of participating in the uprising or not.

After some thought, President Abraham Lincoln commuted the sentences of most of them. But 38 still were executed in Mankato, Minn., constituting the largest mass hanging in U.S. history.

Then, there's the approximately 150 elderly, women and children killed at the Sand Creek Massacre in southeastern Colorado in November 1864. The massacre was lead by Col. Chivington, and what followed was too abhorrent to repeat.

In South Dakota at Wounded Knee, the U.S. military in 1890 raced into a village of peaceful Lakota and killed the elders, women and children - another senseless killing.

There are more of these unconscionable killings, too.

Again: In my humble opinion, the U.S. government has nothing to crow about.

We have, however, gone beyond those years. We have taken on the federal government as our government, too. That means the government also provides us funding and supplies for programs such as Head Start, housing, social services and so on - just like it does for the rest of the country.

Many of our family members willingly serve in the military. Indians serve in the armed forces in extraordinarily high numbers. In general, American Indians are proud of their record as defenders of this country - our country.

Finally, there the treaties. For the Three Affiliated Tribes, the Fort Laramie treaties of 1851 and 1886 provided land. True, the U.S. government took some of that land rather surreptitiously, but we were able to hold the line because of that legal document - a treaty.

Those documents are important, shouldn't be abrogated and should be taken seriously.

Means and his group are seemingly out of step, but they remind us of our tragic history.

Letters to the Editor

We need our elders to keep the language alive

Dear Editor,

My name is Jamie Madison/Bad Hand. I go to school at St. Francis Indian School. I have been wanting to write this letter for a while. I wanted to tell you how I really feel about my Lakota language.

It is my culture and my background to learn the Lakota language. Everyone in my (tiwahe) family speaks and understands the Lakota language.

I am happy that some people from the reservations are giving their best to keep the Lakota tradition alive.

As for the young Lakota children, we older Lakota have to teach them to speak and understand the Lakota ways. All Lakota children are strong, beautiful, proud, and confident of being Lakota. But many young Lakota just don't care about their Lakota tradition. That is why the older people need to bring the Lakota tradition back in to the circle. We could start teaching these young children by showing them the tradition ways.

I know that most of the elder Lakota people were mistreated when they were young and so they were afraid to show their culture. Now we need to be really brave and show them that were not scared of showing our culture anymore. We are a very proud Lakota people.

Jamie Madison

Different strategies needed to teach

Dear Editor,

I am a young Lakota student at St. Francis Indian School, and I believe that the language is important because languages identify people. I also think that the language should be taught to students at a young age.

Students should be taught the language at an early age because they are our future. If we don't teach young students the language they'll think that we don't care about it and because young kids look up to us they won't want to learn it and it will be lost. If we do teach kids, however, we must make it interesting. In seventh and eighth grade when I was at Tiospaye Topa School in Laplant all we did was review study sheets. Reading off of the same piece of paper day after day gets boring, even for someone in high school. We should do things like making up games where the person that knows most Lakota wins. Children will think, "Oh man I almost won last time maybe I'll study more." Pretty soon those children will be fluent because they are dedicated, whereas if they are not dedicated or have no desire they won't learn anything.

All in all, we should teach younger students the language (but keep it interesting) so they can grow up to teach the next generation after that, and those kids can teach others and so on.

Finding My Voice

By Dana Lonehill

What home is

Dana Badmilk

Yesterday my friend Bobby took me out to Sharp's corner to pick up a Western Union from my mom and some presents from my dad. It was a relatively quiet trip for both of us, because we always seem to talk non stop. We turned around at Sharps and went up Goose Neck Road to my dad's. The sun was starting it's downward descent in the west. It made me realize I forgot my camera.

After filling Bobby's trunk with presents we started home, both of us a little more talkative. Then we got quiet again south of Porcupine Butte.

The reason I became quiet again was because as the sun dipped more towards the horizon, the more brilliant the colors became. It's not like I haven't seen a million sunsets but this one was different.

This is why. When I left the reservation at age 18, I pretty much thought there was no turning back. Nope, I am going to go where there are more opportunities for my children and I. That is how I used to think. I lived in different cities across a tri-state area, the largest being St. Paul, Minnesota. I used to look at the skyscrapers and traffic in amazement. This is where it's at and where I need to be, is how I thought. I wanted my children to learn about other cultures, see other things. I wanted them to see more of the world than just the reservation. I wanted them to be more diversified, all the while I struggled to live in St. Paul.

When I made the decision to move home was when I had my daughter and realized nobody ever got to see her. My kids loved coming home to the rez, but they hardly knew their family and culture. While I was out trying to make them live and learn amongst other cultures, they were growing up without theirs.

I thought of this as I watched the sun go down while driving on the hills between Wounded Knee and Pine Ridge.

The clouds were dark purple around the sun and the sun was a brilliant red as it stood on the western edge of the Earth. It looked as if the sun lit the whole horizon on fire and as the clouds hung further in the air they became different shades of sunset. It was a beautiful Christmas Eve Sunset.

As we neared into Pine Ridge I saw the trail of two jets.

One was headed east and one was headed west. I have no idea where they were going, who was on them, who was going where for Christmas or how long it had been since the pilot had watched a sunset.

I did know one thing, that directly below them in the vast openness of the prairie, that at that moment, Pine Ridge Reservation was the most beautiful place in the world. A place my children will grow up knowing who they are and where they are from.

The sun was down by the time we reached my house, even though there were mud puddles everywhere and dirty snow, I knew I was home and I was indeed grateful. That thought alone made for a wonderful Christmas this year.

Northern Perspectives

By Dr. Archie Beauvais

Hope for a new year

The year is quickly coming to a close and I am praying that there will be no more suicides among the young Lakota. 2007 was a turbulent year as they say on the Rosebud and those who died numbered in the teens. When I was growing up I do not recall a single incident where someone had ended their own life. It was never viewed as an alternative to living or not being able to confront a major issue in our lives.

It's a topic that is very sensitive, but nevertheless people have to talk about it and help to demystify it as an alternative to living.

As youngsters we were faced with poverty, hunger and hopelessness, but I think we thought that everyone exhibited those things and we didn't think anything different of ourselves. I don't know if we were any tougher growing up the way we did, but if longevity and survival are the indicators of overcoming such obstacles then I guess we were resilient.

I wished we could package such resolve and determination and show youngsters today what it took to overcome the crowded conditions, little clothing and poor nutrition. There was no such thing as a holiday turkey for our community and God forbid if anyone ever gave us free gravel for our driveways. I love the low energy assistance program of today, but it was unheard of as we struggled with the cold. You could see us run to school even in the dead of winter. We would often stop at the old Abourzek Store which is now the Mission Shopping Center and then, run on to school. I don't ever remember getting a ride to school.

This past year the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Suicide Task Force has been meeting on a regular basis and their dedication is to be commended. What is needed to assist anyone contemplating any kind of difficulties is direct one on one counseling and the task force has certainly been advocating for that. The latest word is that the Indian Health Service might be beefing up its counseling staff at the Rosebud Hospital, while the task force expects to receive grant funding to further coordinate their activities.

It was equally as important when Sen. Tim Johnson officially inquired of the Indian Health Service about funding more mental health professionals in order to provide direct services. It seems he was also concerned about the differences in data that the hospitals were reporting as compared to that of law enforcement.

Homer Whirlwind Soldier of Grass Mountain is also being proactive when it comes to suicide as he coordinated a concert at Todd County High School and St. Francis Indian School along with daughter, Tonya. He has plans to do other follow-up activities and will be forthcoming with that.

We shouldn't forget that a number of notable Lakota people besides Homer are also talking to the youth about the fact that life is to be lived and there was no place for suicide in the traditional lifestyle of the Lakota. A continuing schedule of traditional activities were meant to support Lakota youth from name givings and adoption ceremonies to recognizing someone for induction to certain societies that pushed for the well being of all tribal members. The emphasis was always on the welfare of others and not the obstacles that one might face.

As we begin the New Year we trust that collectively our society will not be faced with the sadness of losing a youngster to suicide as those who are left behind are surely burdened with the uncertainty of coping with life themselves.

This is especially so during the holidays. Whoever reads this, it means that we are going into 2008 with a desire to live life to the fullest and enjoy the years we have left on Mother Earth.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University. A decorated Vietnam Veteran and is currently director of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Lakota Language project.

Floyd Westerman

He said there is a reality of all that, that is the spiritual way to come back, we have to look at it and go toward it. It's like we are all in this big circle and some of us are looking at other Christian direction.

"We should look at the co'kata luta, the red center for our children's sake and take our children to the inipi. If you do the inipi four times and the sun dance, you begin to understand something about that.

"We pray to God through the tree because that is how we speak to the spirit world and reach for help and ask our ancestors on the other side to help us, for Tunkshila to help us. In the Indian way, you don't pray for yourself, you pray for someone else who is sick and who has problems in drugs, you pray for someone who needs help," he said.

"You don't ask nothing for yourself because Tunka'sila he already knows what is wrong with you without asking. That is the basic way how that powers work, it is a beautiful way that is thousands and thousands of years old. It goes back to more than 12,000 years ago.

"All Indians know how to share, the give ways and the potlatch in the northwest. I am sick and tired of all these things I want to give it away. That wasn't even the basis of Jesus Christ, he went around helping people, he died on the cross for everyone's sins. Mitakuye, when you sun dance.

"And that is what is it, for all the relations, we were doing that 12,000 years before, it makes sense to go back to the way we were doing it.

"That is what we need now, our kids are lost in meth, guns and the pop culture. I know there is no way out of this, but the spiritual way. Casinos are claiming Indians to be selfish people, shutting out their own relations.

"To the present day situation, we need more youth programs, I have a horse program designed to have a horse, to become athletic on horses and have intertribal competition on a horse, imagine that.

He spoke of how they do that in Pine Ridge today, and everyone can do that. "I took it to school one time, and a lot of kids wanted to sign up for the classes and wanted to learn how to ride a horse and eventually it was adopted by the school."

I think a person a can follow the old way and even pray the way Jesus did, I think the Bible and Christianity is the worst thing that happened to man, Jesus Christ was a holy man, he did not carry the Bible, there wasn't even a Bible when he lived, it was written after he died.

"So you know a lot of things were made up.

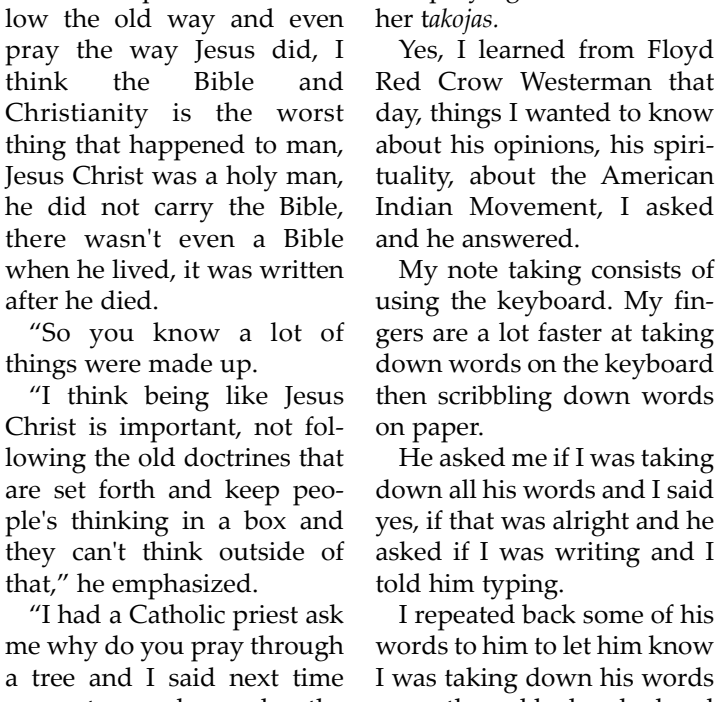
"I think being like Jesus Christ is important, not following the old doctrines that are set forth and keep people's thinking in a box and they can't think outside of that," he emphasized.

"I had a Catholic priest ask me why do you pray through a tree and I said next time you eat a apple or play the organ think where they came from, where medicine or herbs come from like the can'sasa, it is the under bark of the red willow.

"Next time you take a deep breath of oxygen what spirit gives us that. And when you exhale what spirit.

"We have a great connection to the tree. That we pray to God through the tree and ask for help for the takojas in a safe way. It is not uncommon to see a traditional grandma standing at a tree and praying to Tunka'sila for her t*akojas.*

Yes, I learned from Floyd Red Crow Westerman that day, things I wanted to know about his opinions, his spirituality, about the American Indian Movement, I asked and he answered.



My note taking consists of using the keyboard. My fingers are a lot faster at taking down words on the keyboard then scribbling down words on paper.

He asked me if I was taking down all his words and I said yes, if that was alright and he asked if I was writing and I told him typing.

I repeated back some of his words to him to let him know I was taking down his words correctly and he laughed and told me I was fast.

It was habit and it was because I treasured his words, so I kept them.

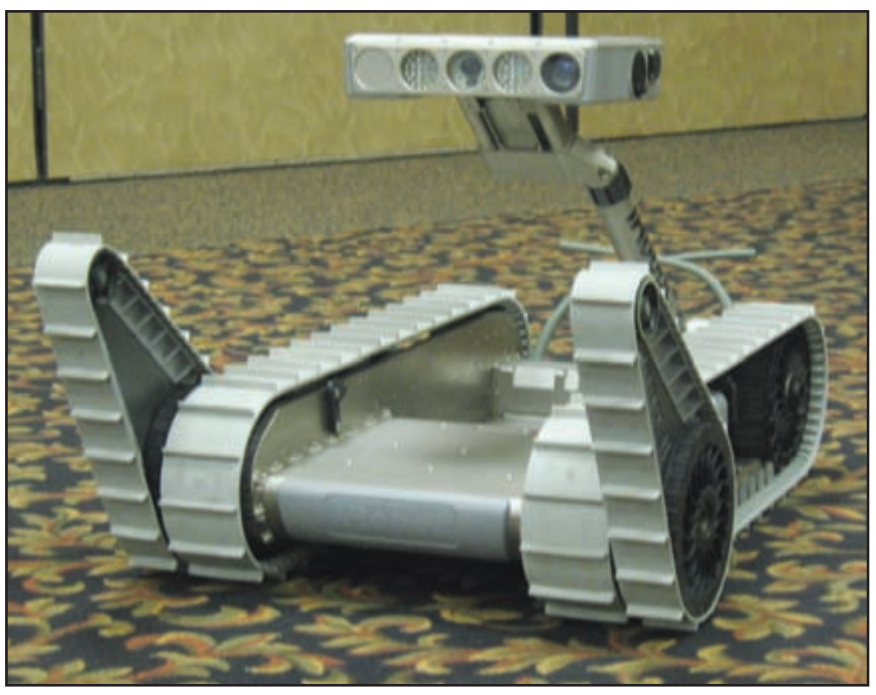
OLC robot excites kids about science

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

KYLE - If anything can get students excited about science, it's a robot. To that end, Oglala Lakota College has bought an i-Robot PackBot Explorer just like the ones used in NASA's Mars missions.



And soon, students from OLC and the college's outreach reservation schools will simulate a Mars landing in the Badlands, according to Jay Roman, technician with OLC's math and science department.

It will be a "full mission from front to finish," Roman said.

The group will pick four to six "landing sites," chosen for their similarity to Mars in geology, chemistry, rocks, erosion, and so on, Roman said. Students will plan their mission from satellite maps of the Badlands and then land the Rover in the approximate area - "because it's not an exact science when you're going to Mars," Roman said - and then navigate according to plans.

While executing the mission, students won't actually see the robot, which will be about half a mile away in a mobile laboratory van, Roman said.

The PackBot has three video channels and twenty data channels that will relay information to the students.

Left: The I-Robot PackBot Explorer acquired by Oglala Lakota College is like the robots used in NASA's Mars missions. Right: Jay Roman, of OLC's math and science department said the robot is like a kids' magnet and it excites them about science.

"And so they have to effectively execute their mission," Roman said. "They're seeing the terrain for the first time through the robot and through the explorer, and so it gives them that whole sense that they're really doing it. It's not as easy as driving a little radio-controlled car across the floor."

Roman said the students' exercise will simulate NASA's planned mission to the wetlands area of Mars, which resembles the Badlands in winter.

NASA came out about a year ago with a directive to include people with hands-on experience in their programs, so OLC collaborates with NASA and the University of Tennessee "to use the exact-same protocols on our missions as NASA uses, the same planning modalities and so on," Roman said.

He said the Badlands project is also planned in cooperation with the Jet Propulsion Laboratory and Arizona State University, where a lot of the Mars mission planning happens and where data coming back from the Mars Rover is interpreted.

Roman said the Mars landing project could eventually be opened up to research by scientists outside the college and will be valuable experience for the students involved.

"When they're done, they have actual experience that they can put on their résumé," he said. "They planned a mission in the Badlands the same as planning a mission to Mars."

Roman demonstrated the PackBot Explorer at the Lakota Nation Invitational at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center Dec. 19-22. The robot is the same one used in Afghanistan and Iraq to look for unexploded ordinance, he said.

OLC bought the robot, and Roman said, "You could buy several BMW's with what this cost."

"It's military hardened, and it's pretty hard to break," he said. "You know, the Badlands is a challenging environment."

The robot is "a kids' magnet," Roman said. "They love it. We're hoping - and what we're seeing - is that they want to be a part of it. Whether it's planning the missions or help putting science experiments on it or just running it around … it gets them excited about science."

O'Leary: Cheyenne River soldier laid to rest

TIMBER LAKE (AP) - Army Cpl. Tanner O'Leary, an enrolled member of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, was praised for his service to country and others and then buried last Thursday in a private cemetery on the family ranch south of Timber Lake.

The 23-year-old native of Timber Lake and Eagle Butte died Dec. 9 of injuries sustained in a bomb explosion in Afghanistan.

He was a member of the U.S. Army's 82nd Airborne Division.

Former Cheyenne River Tribe Chairman Greg Bourland said O'Leary represented the best of the warrior culture in an American Indian society that enlists and serves in the military at five times the national average.

``They're the first to step forward in war time, the first to step forward in the defense of their nation,'' Bourland said during a memorial service.

``You know he was rough and ready, rambunctious, a take-no-prisoners kind of guy,'' Sandra Lebeau said before she read a poem Tanner had written to his mother when he graduated from high school in 2003.

The poem surprised her, Lebeau said, because even though she and Tanner's mother were lifelong friends, she'd not seen the poetic side of the young man. He wrote of how his mother completed him, how she was the one who ``painted the world a rainbow when it's filled with broken dreams.''

Sen. John Thune recalled meeting a young Tanner O'Leary while the senator was still a member of the U.S. House and out of gas west of Timber Lake in a vehicle with staff members.

O'Leary, on his way home from school, stopped to help. He gave Thune a ride to town and stayed with the group until he was sure they were back on the road, Thune said. ``It was a brief encounter, but it was meaningful,'' Thune said.

He said it was an early indication of ``a young man who saw someone in need of help and was willing to stop.'' That quality, Thune suggested, may have prompted O'Leary to join the service and defend his country.

Gov. Mike Rounds said that in giving his life for his country and people, O'Leary emphasized the cost connected to the freedoms that every U.S. citizen enjoys.

O'Leary, a father of a four-year-old daughter, is the second tribal member to die in the Middle East. Pfc. Sheldon Hawk Eagle, 21, was killed in Iraq in November 2003.

One goal - thousands of miles

OLC hears Hawaiian example on language revitalization

By Sandra White Shield
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - Kanoe Kanaka 'ole, 'Aha Punana Leo Preschool Program Coordinator and Brian Charging, Director of the Oglala Lakota Language Institute have a common goal. That is the revitalization of native language within their communities.

At the annual retreat of the board of directors of Oglala Lakota College and of community center directors, held Dec. 22, Kanaka 'ole spoke of the way in which native Hawaiian language is coming back from near extinction.

The language was spoken so little that in order to establish a way of teaching written texts had to be found and used to re-create a language base.

"Today," she said, "we have 5,000 speakers, but we need to have 10,000 to be able to say that the language is not in jeopardy of becoming extinct." Kanaka 'ole said that there are three ways of learning and three places in which to teach it. The ways of teaching are from the spiritual world, from the genealogy world, and from the ancestral world. The places of teaching are in the womb by singing and speaking, from the home and family, and from the great wide world.

Language revitalization curriculums must be built on cultural philosophy, traditional pedagogy and discipline strategies and real-life application in a cultural context.

The goals for the learner outcomes are: a profound respect for ancestors, their beliefs and traditional practices; a person who articulates expressions of feelings and ideas in native language and non-native language; a person connected to the land as a steward; one who values education and seeks knowledge independently; and someone who contributes to family and community.

Traditional learning goes beyond the four walls," Kanaka 'ole said, "and incorporates independent learning and thinking."

She said that their language teachers teach with concept teaching not skill teaching.

Teachers involved in the program need to have passion, patience, nurturing hearts, objective minds, good communication skills, tenacity, and a thick skin.

"Families are essential to the immersion program. Home and school need to mirror each other," Kanaka 'ole said.

Floyline Two Bulls, student representative from Oglala Lakota College attended the presentation. The most important element that she received was that kids learn when they are younger.

Two Bulls said, "In the Lakota way we tell stories to the young. These stories are made to teach lessons."

Fred Stands of the White Clay board said, "We keep our culture and histories, the sweat lodge, the Humblecha, the Sundance. We still keep them strong but the language is fading out."

Oglala Lakota College President Thomas Shortbull commented that if the immersion strategy that is currently being attempted is going to work that there must be buy-in and support from the communities and the homes.

Unless the children are exposed to the Lakota language very early there is little chance of the effort working.

Hulk Hogan helps raise funds for tribes

RAPID CITY - Hulk Hogan walked out onto the basketball court at the Lakota Nation Invitational Friday evening, and the crowd sent up a long cheer. They had heard he would be there, and even though the weather threatened blizzard conditions, he made it.

When asked earlier what he was doing in Rapid City, Hogan replied, "I'm dream-seeking. I'm just dream-seeking all over the place."

Hogan was referring to his involvement with Dreamseekers, an organization started by him and Ernie Stevens, Jr., chairman of the National Indian Gaming Association to raise money for tribes.

Hogan also said he "signed a few autographs" while in Rapid City, but his description was modest. According to his staff, they brought 500 photos for him to sign for fans, and they ran out. The line of people waiting for autographs and a couple of minutes with the Hulk stretched long down a hallway at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center.

Hogan and Stevens traveled to LNI to present replica checks to South Dakota tribes and tribal organizations for Christmas presents for children and for other needs such as food, shelter, and counseling.

Actual checks were sent to recipients earlier. "We're here just to show support and get everybody pumped up," Hogan said.

The money came from donations from the Seminole Tribe in Florida, the Mohegan tribe of Wounded Knee District School Foundation promotes local tax preparation on the Rez

MANDERSON - Wounded Knee District School Foundation, Inc. a local Pine Ridge nonprofit, is in it's third year of offering income tax preparation service to the local communities and is expanding the number of available locations.

The Foundation offers this service to local reservation residents so they don't have to travel off the reservation for tax preparation. It also benefits the foundation because it is used as a fund raiser for the nonprofit itself.

The regular WKSDF office at the Old College center in Manderson is always open but now Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. The tax preparation service is open for tax business. Additional offices will be offered in Pine Ridge at the old Pine Ridge hospital, and in Kyle at the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort (across from Piya Wiconi)

The WKSDF encourages residents to come in early and get their information entered into the computer even if they have not yet received their W2, as this will help start the process for a speedy refund when the IRS begins accepting e-file transactions on January 11, 2008.

On Jan. 7, 2008, Santa Barbara Bank & Trust, the bank utilized by WKDSF, Inc. will allow processing for Instant Refund Anticipation Loans and regular RALS.(advance loan checks or credit card.)

By coming in early and entering their information, residents will get a check that day within a few minutes, up to $1,900 (depending on the amount of refund and if residents qualifies with Santa Barbara Bank & Trust 'SBBT')

The IRS no longer allows early loans on pay stubs from any tax preparer. No tax returns will be accepted for process by any IRS approved bank loans without all valid W2's and other official proof of income from a resident's employer(s) and other necessary supporting documents.

Documents needed would be the 2006 tax return, Social Security Cards for the taxpayer and dependents, any W2G from gambling winnings, retirement income transactions, bank interest statements, and two forms of identification, one of which should be a picture ID.

Federal Law requires the valid picture ID in order to file federal income taxes. For more information call WKDSF at 605-867-1176.

Colombe responds to appeal

ROSEBUD - Last month the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Supreme Court granted an appeal by RST in its quest to recover $399,353.00 from the management firm of BBC Entertainment. RST was represented by attorney Dana Hanna. At that time former RST president, Charles Colombe responded with a press release and noted that he would do so again later in response to the judgment.

The following press release was issued by Colombe and is printed in its entirety as submitted.

"We expected Judge Jones to deny our request for a new trial. However, we had to make a record and we did exactly that. It is unfortunate that Judge Jones never understood the difference between accrual and cash accounting.

"I plan on exausting our legal remidies and further to possibly write a book on this whole scenario, including our contract, our building and operating the casino for five years and the success that we all enjoyed. Finally, the lessons learned about doing business with the Rosebud Sioux Tribe is an experience that should be shared," said Colombe in his statement.

"As for Judge Jones's order, it's obvious that the administration and the courts both failed to recognize that the approved Constitutional Amendments take effect immediately and for all practical purposes, we have not had a functioning court since the BIA ratified the Secretarial Election. The people voted for an independent court and this administration chooses to ignore the Constitution once again," Colombe said.

Second trial in 1975 Aquash slaying set for June

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) _ The second man charged with the 1975 slaying of an American Indian Movement activist will stand trial in Rapid City starting June 17, according to court documents.

John Graham, 52, was extradited from Vancouver, British Columbia, on Dec. 8, four years after he was arrested and charged with killing fellow AIM member Anna Mae Pictou Aquash on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Her body was found in February 1976 north of Wanblee with a gunshot wound to the head.

Graham pleaded innocent to first-degree murder in U.S. District Court in Rapid City and is being held in the county jail.

U.S. Attorney Marty Jackley said he was ``looking forward to justice being served in this matter for all those involved, including the family members of Anna Mae Aquash.''

Graham's lawyer, John Murphy of Rapid City, declined to comment.

Fritz Arlo Looking Cloud, a Lakota from Pine Ridge who had been living homeless in Denver, was convicted in 2004 and received a mandatory life prison sentence.

At his trial, witnesses said Looking Cloud, Graham and another AIM member, Theda Clark, drove Aquash from Denver and that Graham shot Aquash in the Badlands as she begged for her life.

Clark has not been charged. She lives in a nursing home in western Nebraska and has refused to discuss the case.

Graham, a Southern Shoshone from the Yukon also known as John Boy Patton, denies killing Aquash, though he acknowledged being in the car with her from Denver.

He spent most of the four years fighting his return to South Dakota under house arrest and was extradited following the refusal by the Supreme Court of Canada to review his case. Prosecutors said some AIM leaders ordered that Aquash be killed late in 1975 because they suspected she was a government informant. Those leaders have denied the accusation and blamed the government for her death. Federal authorities also denied any involvement.

Connecticut, and several bands in California, according to a news release from NIGA. Those tribes donated about $150,000, Hogan said, and the money went to tribes in both North Dakota and South Dakota.

Each tribe received about $5,000, said Jesse Renteria, Stevens' press aide.

The Seminole tribe also chartered a plane to bring Stevens and Hogan to Rapid City, Stevens said.

Receiving checks were Lakota Nation Invitational Tournament, Oglala Lakota College, SuAnne Big Crow Boys and Girls Club, Sicangu Child and Family Services of the Rosebud Tribe, Cheyenne River Youth Project, Sitting Bull School, Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, and the Yankton Sioux Tribe.

Hogan and Stevens received blankets in an honoring ceremony, and afterward received thanks from Rodney Bordeaux, Chairman Rosebud Soux Tribe; Robert Cournoyer of Yankton Sioux; Roger Trudell of Santee Sioux of Nebraska, Mike Jandreau of Lower Brule; Lester Thompson of Crow Creek; and William "Shorty" Brewer of Oglala Sioux Tribe; and Tom Shortbull of Oglala Lakota College.

Stevens credited Kevin Killer, 28, now a student at OLC, for planting the idea for Dreamseekers some years ago.

Killer said he knew Stevens through his late father, Francis Killer, and approached Stevens in Las Vegas to ask him to help his tribe, the Oglala Sioux.

Stevens started finding assistance for the Pine Ridge Reservation, and since then has expanded efforts to other tribes throughout the Great Plains, according to the press release.

Stevens, a member of the Oneida tribe of Wisconsin, said fundraising is just part of his life. As chairman of NIGA, he said he works with legislators at the federal and state levels and with the media "to promote and protect our industry" so that it can create jobs and create economic opportunities in communities.

"This is just our Christmas drive," Stevens said. "My day job is working with legislation, working with tribes. So this is an annual project that we do to help the North and South Dakota tribes."

Hogan said he and Stevens have been working together for almost five years, primarily discussing healthcare and education for children, but they are raising funds for a variety of needs.

"Some people are in hotels or don't have shelter … a lot of families need food, you know; a lot of people need counseling … so Ernie and his team have a huge plan," Hogan said.

Suicide Warning Signs

Seek help as soon as possible by contacting a mental health professional or by calling the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 1-800-273-TALK if you or someone you know exhibits any of the following signs:

- Threatening to hurt or kill oneself or talking about wanting to hurt or kill oneself
- Looking for ways to kill oneself by seeking access to firearms, available pills, or other means
- Talking or writing about death, dying, or suicide when these actions are out of the ordinary for the person
- Feeling hopeless
- Feeling rage or uncoltrolled anger or seeking revenge
- Acting reckless or engaging in risky activities-seemingly without thinking
- Feeling trapped-like there's no way out
- Increasing alcohol or drug use
- Withdrawing from friends, family, and society
- Feeling anxious, agitated, or unable to sleep or sleeping all the time
- Experiencing dramtic mood changes
- Seeing no reason for living or having no sense of purpose in life.

What to Do If You Think a Person Is Having Suicidal Thoughts

You cannot predict death by suicide, but you can identify people who are at increased risk for suicidal behavior, take precautions, and refer them for effective treatment.

Ask the person directly if he or she is 1) having suicidal thoughts/ideas 2) Has a plan to do so, and 3) Has access to lethal means.

- "Are you thinking about killing yourself?"
- "Have you ever tried to hurt yourself before?"
- "Do you think you might try to hurt yourself today?"
- "Have you thought of ways that you might hurt yourself?"

This won't increase the person's suicidal thoughts. It will give you information that indicates how strongly the person has thought about killing him or herself.

IS PATH WARM?

Ideation -Threatened or communicated
Substance abuse -Excessive or increased
Purposeless -No reason for living
Anxiety -Agitation/Insomnia
Trapped -Feeling there is no way out
Hopelessness
Withdrawing -From friends,family,society
Anger -(uncontrolled)-Rage,seeking revenge
Recklessness -Risky acts, unthinking
Mood changes (dramatic)

Take seriously all suicide threats and all suicide attempts. A past history of suicide attempts is one of the strongest risk factors for death by suicide.

There is no evidence that "no-suicide contracts" prevent suicide. In fact, they may give counselors a false sense of reassurance.

Listen and Look for red flags for suicidal behavioir, indicated by the mnemonic:

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

My husband and I are separated. I wanted it, because I didn't feel good about myself. I used my time to heal myself until I fell in love with both me and my husband again. In the meantime, my husband got a twenty year old girlfriend with a baby. She was one of the people in our group that hung out together before we were separated.

Anyway, when I was pissed off at him I told him to go get it somewhere else. Then he did and it upset me. I read The Four Agreements like you always tell people to. That is what helped change my way of looking at myself and my world.

I had to accept responsibility for my own situation, and realize who my husband really is, and make a decision that I loved him just as he really is. Now I am sad because he still has a girl friend, and they live together, but he and I sneak around behind her back. I am waiting for him and I told him that. When he is through being stupid then we will get back together. He tells me he loves me and it will work out.

I want to know how everything looks?

Growing and Wondering

Dear Wondering:

It is working out now. Everything you are doing is in alignment with your actions, thoughts, emotions, and prayers. You need the time of separation for you to complete some practical goals (financial security, neutral ground, etc.).

Your mate also needs time to see if you really have changed. You used to yell at him and make him responsible for your "stuff".

Now you don't have that need to whip him for your state of mind. He has to test that, witness that, walk with that, to know, that indeed, you changed.

That change then, will affect the way he is about you, and treats you. That changes the relationship back to a better balance.

How long will that take? I see next summer, most probably in August, when it is hot outside. I see a picnic table, close to some water, with beautiful trees. That means at least some happy, here-now memories. When will you live together again: The weather is cold. Perhaps a winter visit to the same summer spot that I "saw" earlier. The picnic table has about six inches of snow on it. The winter scene is white over the water set against a back-drop of green-black trees. The dark hills surround one end of the lake with a gentle slope down to lower level hills. There is a tall pine tree to the right of you.

You have a winter scarf over your face, keeping the cold wind from freezing your nose off.

Which year? Hmmm, summer first, then winter. One year from now.

It will all work out. Time is your friend.

Now, I want to take this opportunity to keep the hangers-on out there from hanging-on. Not every relationship is destined to last until death do you part. I am not encouraging everybody to work towards that particular demand. I do encourage you to be okay, within the circumstances of what is really the best for you. Sometimes, it is the best for all parties concerned to shift their physical positions; i.e., move apart. Sometimes it is within the design of love (meaning God too), that people prosper from each other. That they grow into wiser, clearer, cleaner, healthier people together. That they learn to love their wisdom as two people with an agreement inside of their hearts, minds, and spirits. From that point, they are each other's hearts. The other side of that simply put is: or they learn from each other harsly and move apart.

How many relationships are "bound to work out?" About eight or nine percent.

That would of course be influenced in a huge way by the young adults. Young adult relationships just plain don't work out as often. That is a reflection of their personal chaos.

They haven't wised up yet. People in their 30's are still schitzy, with drugs and alcohol busting everyone's lives apart. The forties are the time of discontent. Each mate really examines the other mates flaws. The fifties. Power years. Relationships have a better chance. The 60's. If you fall in love then, it will flow very well for both people. The 70's. True love lasts and supports the life-force of the other.

The 80's, if your both alive, you are the same as each other. The 90's good for you - anyway you play it, it's great.

Dear Anna,

I am in love with two women at the same time. They are both sisters. What do you see?

Smiling but worried

Dear Worried:

R-U-N. Anyway it goes, it is a big, loud, noise. You son, are in trouble. As an old sissy rocker, Ricky Nelson used to say: "Bye, Bye, Love, Bye Bye Happiness, I think I'm gonna C-rye-iiii."

I wonder what everyone is going to learn from this experience?

Dear Anna:

My grandmother has two sons and they are seeing the same woman. My other grandmother's grand-daughter's niece-by-marriage is seeing two brothers.

I know all the details and wonder if I should tell my grandmother that is still alive.

Confused on what to do

Dear Confused:

Do nothing. She already knows.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

~Charlene Mary Bush White Horse~

MARTIN - Charlene M. Bush-White Horse, 56, Martin, died Wednesday, Dec. 19, 2007, at Bennett County Health Care Center.

Survivors include three sons, Fred Bush Jr., Rapid City; Bruce Kills In Water Sr., Little Eagle, and Joseph Bush Sr., Martin; five daughters, Karen Bush and Claradene Black Tail Deer, both of Lame Deer, Mont., Angel Bush and Lily Bush, both of Martin, and Sherie Timber, Ashland, Mont.; two brothers, William Apple and Albert Apple Sr., both of Martin; six sisters, Ramona Ashmore, Salt Lake City, Phyllis White Bear Claws, Madison, Kathy Dubray, Devonna Bush and Amanda Takes War Bonnett, all of Martin; and Jacquelyn Reddy, Alberton, Mont.; and her husband Louie White Horse, Martin; 33 grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. She is also survived by many nieces and nephews and in the Lakota way, she was grandma to more than 100 grandchildren from her siblings.

Charlene was born Aug. 28, 1951 to Joseph and Rebecca (Cottier) Apple at Pine Ridge. She grew up in Martin with 12 siblings and continued to live in Martin all of her life. She married Fred Bush Sr. in Martin, and to this union there were six children. She worked in food services throughout her working career, working at the Bennett County Hospital, Martin Grade School for many years and most recently as a cook at the Oglala Lakota College Head Start Center in Martin.

She was a foster parent and helped many children who came through her home. She believed in education was an answer for survival and raised her children to achieve educational goals. She served on the local board of the Oglala Lakota College's LaCreek District Center for many years. She supported the beginnings of the Wild Horse Butte Pow wow in conjunction with the Bennett County Fair because she believed promoting cultural awareness and that local community needed their own pow wow. She was a strong supporter of family ties and celebrations. She was known for her bread making skills and her generosity of helping people.

She was preceded in death by her sister Myrnette Janis, her mother Rebecca Cottier-Apple and her father Joseph Apple Sr.; her brothers Joseph Apple Jr. and Ronald V. Cottier.

A one night wake was Sunday, Dec. 23, at Martin Grade School Activities Center in Martin.

Funeral services were Monday, Dec. 24, at the center, with the Rev. Jeff Siscoe officiating. Burial was at Martin Lakota Chapel Cemetery in Martin. Sioux Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.

OGLALA - John L. Cross Dog Sr., 46, Oglala, died Monday, Dec. 17 at Pine Ridge Hospital. Survivors include three sons, John Cross Dog Jr., Caesar Cross Dog, and Bradley Cross Dog, all of Porcupine; six brothers, Linn Cross Dog, Calico, Chester Cross Dog, Rex Crow and Eldon Cross Dog, all of Oglala, and William Cross Dog and Ronald Cross Dog, both of Inez, Ky.; three sisters, Marilyn Deer of LaCrosse, Wis., and Wanda Cross Dog and Flora Cross Dog, both of Oglala. A two night wake Dec. 20 at Loneman School in Oglala. Funeral services were Saturday, Dec. 22, at the school, with the Rev. Agnes Tyon officiating and traditional Lakota services by Rick Two Dogs. Burial was at Advent Chapel Episcopal Cemetery in Calico. Sioux Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.
